Kurt Waldheim tells the 'Post'

'Calling me a Nazi is grotesque'

By ILONA HENRY
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

VIENNA. – Austrian President Kurt Waldheim yesterday denied having been an intelligence officer attached to a unit in Salonika that ordered the deportation to the death camps of Jews from Rhodes and Crete.

It has been established that Waldheim was the top assistant in the German intelligence unit in Greece – the Ic/AO.

"I was never an intelligence officer, like some people wanted to make believe. The letter 'AO' meant Abhoer-Offizier (literally a 'listening officer') and that was never my task," Waldheim told The Jerusalem Post in an exclusive interview during his second day in office.

Concerning the "daily diary" of the intelligence unit, which he had to initial, Waldheim said it never contained information about deportations of Jews. The diary dealt only with the activities of the regular troops, mainly in Yugoslavia.

Waldheim also said he had not been in Salonika when the Jews were deported from there. "Between November 1942 and April 1943, I was not even in the city. I was in Vienna studying. Then, I was sent to Albania until the autumn of 1943 and only then was I transferred to Athens."

Waldheim explained that "of course" he knew all about concentration camps and atrocities committed against Jews all over Europe, especially after visiting close friends in Holland.

"It was a grave disappointment for me to be labelled a Nazi, because of my membership in the Wehrmacht, which I did not join voluntarily. Calling me a Nazi is grotesque," he said.

"I survived the last election campaign because I knew I had nothing to hide. All this defamation was part of an election campaign and there is no doubt that the intention to ruin my good name and reputation stemmed from Vienna."

Asked why he had not mentioned his wartime service in the Balkans, the president denied he had done so out of a bad conscience, as had been charged against him, "in some circles in the U.S." He had not mentioned the French front either, he said, but "not because I did something wrong there, but because in the book I decided to stress the event which changed my life – my injury while a young man of 20."

This injury, he said, probably saved his life, because after recovering, he was sent to the Balkans as an interpreter from Italian, which he knew.

Concerning his relations with Israelis, Waldheim said he had many friends in Israel. "Among them are President Chaim Herzog, for whom I have much respect and esteem, not only because of his abilities, but also because of his correct attitude in difficult situations."

At the UN, Waldheim said, he had also subsequently had very friendly ties with Israel's ambassador Yehuda Blum and his wife. "Of course, we had difference of opinion, but we still saw each other privately in our homes."

Asked about the anti-Semitic undertones during the election campaign, Waldheim said he had always called for moderation, and much that had been said had not been to his liking. But what happened in Austria was in reaction to provoca-

IAI hits terrorist bases

Jerusalem Post Staff

The Syrian-aligned Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine is believed to have been responsible for yesterday morning's foiled sea-borne attack on northern Israel.

Four terrorists in a dinghy were spotted and killed by Israeli troops just north of Rosh Hanikra in the early hours of early yesterday morning. Two Israeli soldiers died in the clash, and nine were wounded.

The PFLP claimed responsibility in a communiqué from Damascus. It said its forces, together with members of the Lebanese faction of the Syrian National Socialist Party, had launched the attack.

Western experts monitoring the situation in Lebanon disclosed that the PFLP operates two naval bases in Lebanon: one in Beirut and one in Sidon. This fact, together with the communiqué from Damascus, tends to confirm the belief that the PFLP indeed staged the attack.

Two sea-borne attacks were launched by the PFLP in the 1970s one in the Red Sea, and one against northern Israel.

Syria yesterday took an extremely cautious stand on the incident. An official statement issued at noon over Damascus Radio said that Syria would continue to work to free Israeli-occupied land, but that it condemned air hijacks and attacks on civilians.

Israel Air Force planes attacked a number of terrorist targets on the perimeter of the Ein el-Hilwe refugee camp south of Sidon yesterday afternoon, the IDF spokesman announced. All planes returned safely to base, and the pilots reported accurate hits, he added.

The bases attacked belong to Abu Mussa's breakaway faction of Fatah, the Popular Struggle Front, and the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

These organizations are held responsible for numerous terrorist attacks against Israel in the past. The IDF spokesman said that the buildings attacked had served as headquarters and bases from which terrorist attacks had been launched.

Two IDF soldiers killed in clash

By AVI HOFFMANN
Post Defence Reporter

An attempt by terrorists to carry out a spectacular murder mission against Israeli civilians was foiled in the early hours of yesterday morning by the Israel Defence Forces, which lost two men in the clash.

First-Sergeant Guy Ben-Dov, 21, of Ramat Efal will be buried in Tel Aviv today. The funeral of Sergeant Mansour Rahal, 24, of the Beduin el-Heib tribe, took place in the Galilee village of Frush R..maneh yesterday.

Nine other IDF soldiers were wounded. One, whose injuries were described as severe, was said to be out of danger. The remainder were less seriously wounded, one with light injuries being discharged from hospital after a few hours.

Four terrorists were killed in the clash, after their rubber dinghy was intercepted just north of the Israel border.

Two Syrian-supported groups claimed responsibility for the attack and said the town of Nahariya was their target. A joint communiqué

U.S. 'sorry' for cluster bomb leaks

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. – The Reagan administration yesterday apologized to Israel for the latetst "unauthorized disclosures" to the media involving allegations of Israeli smuggling of cluster bomb technology out of the U.S.

At the same time, American officials said that the U.S. Justice Department, the Customs Service and the Pentagon would continue to investigate the matter in the coming weeks. Despite Israel's firm denial of any wrongdoing, the Americans were unwilling to prejudge the final outcome of their inquiry, the officials said.

U.S. Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs Michael Armacost told Israeli Ambassador Meir Rosenne at a meeting yesterday that there was no administration effort to "get" Israel or to undermine U.S.-Israeli relations. Armacost, according to informed sources, expressed understanding of Israel's anger over the press leaks concerning the investigation.

"We also find the leaks deplorable," a State Department official said. "This should be a confidential investigation."

Pardoned Shin Bet men 'won't quit'

By BARBARA AMOUYAL
For The Jerusalem Post

The three senior General Security Service (Shin Bet) officials pardoned by President Herzog two weeks ago are not planning to resign, a Shin Bet source said yesterday.

The High Court of Justice yesterday rescinded its ban on the publication of affidavits submitted by the three in requesting pardon. All three, like Shin Bet chief Avraham Shalom, admitted that they had committed criminal acts with respect to the cover-up that followed the killing of two terrorists in the April 1984 Ashkelon bus hijacking. They insisted, in their affidavits, that they had acted "under orders and with the permission" of their superiors.

One of the three, a top Shin Bet official who served as a member of *one of the two panels that investi*gated the killing of the terrorists, admitted in his affidavit that, "as a commission member, I worked to conceal the roles of Shin Bet men in the killing of the terrorists."

The High Court has scheduled a hearing on the affair for July 20.

The three officials have been told by Shalom to "wait out" the High Court hearings on petitions challenging the pardons, the Shin Bet source said.

Shalom expects the court to uphold the pardons, the source said, and senior Shin Bet personnel believe that "a change in political leadership" will allow them to continue in their jobs.

The source, referring to the apparent disparity between Shalom's and Vice Premier Shamir's versions of events, said Shalom would "prob-

Shamir 'no' to Harish options

Vice Premier Yitzhak Shamir yesterday rejected Attorney-General Yosef Harish's statement that the only choice facing the cabinet on the Shin Bet affair was between a police investigation and a judicial commission of inquiry.

Talking to reporters in Jerusalem, Shamir said: "With goodwill one can find a legal and logical way to solve the problem, without resorting to a commission of inquiry."

Talking to veterans of the Herut movement later in the day, Shamir repeated the proposal that the issue be dealt with by a sole investigator, who would do his job "in a businesslike manner to the benefit of the future."

He repeated his opposition to the establishment of a judicial commission of inquiry.

Shamir yesterday continued to consult with his aides on the drafting of the deposition that he has to submit next week to the High Court.

A deadly shoot-out on the beach

By DAVID RUDGE

ROSH HANIKRA. – The sound of gunfire blasted the quiet night and flares lit the sky as IDF troops battled terrorist infiltrators just 400 metres north of the border crossing here shortly after midnight on Wednesday.

One of the soldiers who took part in the encounter, first-sergeant Gideon Wittler, recounted from his hospital bed in Nahariya how he had led a group of soldiers down a cliff path to the beach, where a terrorist dinghy came ashore, while other squads searched the area around the cliff.

"We were walking through shallow water at the base of the cliff and could see the dinghy when the terrorists, who had climbed up above us, opened fire with grenades and automatic weapons from a distance of about five metres."

The first grenade exploded close to Wittler's group. "I saw one of the terrorists and managed to fire two or three shots before there was another grenade explosion which knocked my gun out of my hand," added Wittler, who suffered shrapnel wounds to his forehead and left arm.

Despite being wounded and unable to use his left arm, he managed to pull an injured comrade through the water under the lee of an overhanging rock. Wittler then helped the soldier back up the path to a waiting helicopter, which flew them to the hospital.

The 21-year-old soldier said he thought the troops had done an excellent job in pinpointing and killing the terrorists in difficult terrain.

According to other wounded soldiers, one of the terrorists, armed with a Russian-made light machine-

Prisoner swap report denied

Post Defence Reporter

No prisoner exchange is being negotiated at present, top level defence sources told The Jerusalem Post, in response to reports that former Austrian chancellor Bruno Kreisky was negotiating such an exchange between Israel and PLO head Yasser Arafat.

Kreisky told Reuters news agency after a meeting with Arafat this week that two IDF soldiers, Yosef Fink and Rahamim Alsheich, kidnapped in South Lebanon in February were part of the deal.

Defence sources pointed out the two were kidnapped by the radical Shi'ite organization Hizbollah, which has made absolutely no approach to Israel.

Fear of vacuum at Bank of Israel

By PINHAS LANDAU
Post Finance Reporter

Deep concern is being expressed by senior executives at all banks other than Discount at the prospect of a renewed leadership vacuum at the Bank of Israel. This could come about, the bankers believe, if Governor Michael Bruno fails on Sunday to obtain cabinet authorization to dismiss Discount boss Raphael Recanati.

Speaking on condition that they not be identified, the bankers told The Jerusalem Post that the head-on clash with Recanati meant Bruno's own authority, prestige and possibly even his job were on the line. The reasoning is that, given the weight Bruno has attached to the need for Recanati's dismissal, cabinet rejection would be a stinging personal rebuff. In such a case Bruno might well resign.

Were he to go, said the bankers, all the hopes of a strong governor restoring the central bank's independence and pivotal role in economic policy-making would disappear. The bankers recognize that they need a strong central bank to help them work out joint plans to reduce staff and close branches. They need the Bank of Israel to plead their case to the government, and particularly the Treasury on issues such as frozen bank charges and discriminatory taxation against financial service industries.

They know that, given their poor public image today, the Knesset is not well disposed towards them and their problems.

Even if Bruno stays on, the bankers added, his position after being defeated by Recanati would be irreparably weakened, both within the Bank of Israel, and vis-à-vis the banks and the government.

For all these reasons, most Tel

Bomb rocks SA bourse

JOHANNESBURG. – A bomb shook the stock exchange in central Johannesburg yesterday after South Africa's biggest black-led labour federation called for a "national day of action" on Monday against emergency rule by the Pretoria government.

No casualties and little damage were caused by the blast, according to the government's Information Bureau.

The call for Monday's day of action came from the 500,000-strong Congress of South African Trade Unions. It issued a statement saying the decision followed "weeks of rising tension on the factory floor" over detentions of unionists in the month-long emergency.

In Zimbabwe, British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe warned yesterday that the path to a peaceful solution of South Africa's racial conflict would not be open indefinitely and urged talks between the white-led government and its majority black population.

New reality for moshav movement

By CHARLES HOFFMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

"There will be radical changes in the Moshav Movement within a year if the financial package-deal worked out this week holds together and if the farmers face up to the new reality," a secretary of the Moshav Movement, Yohanan Daniel, said yesterday in an interview with The Jerusalem Post.

Daniel spoke after meeting for several hours with the heads of the credit and purchasing association of the Jerusalem Corridor moshavim, where he explained the recovery plan worked out over the past several months.

The government, the Jewish Agency, and the moshav organizations adopted a plan on Wednesday to relieve the $320 million debt accumulated over the past several years by moshavim within the Green Line. Several weeks ago $27m. was allocated to solve the financial problems of the moshavim and kibbutzim in the Jordan Rift Valley and Golan Heights.

Daniel said that the bail-out was conditional on some sweeping changes in the Moshav Movement:

□ Several thousand families who have stopped working their farms or who can't make a go of it economically will give up their land and water quotas and other means of production in return for wiping out their debts.

□ Several dozen moshavim which have virtually ceased functioning as agricultural cooperatives will be converted to community settlements, where everyone will be responsible for earning his own living and the agricultural assets will be transferred to other settlements.

□ The regional credit and purchasing associations, which bear part of the responsibility for letting the farmers' debts get out of hand, will come under tighter supervision and will return to their original functions of extending credit to farmers to meet their current production needs. The associations will have to sell off bankrupt regional enterprises, make drastic cuts in staff and expenses and stop extending liberal loans with virtually no guarantees.

Daniel said that if the swelling debts had not precipitated the current crisis, then perhaps some of these needed reforms might never have been made. "There are many sacred cows involved here, and until recently we couldn't even talk about some of these changes," he said.

The debt conversion and consolidation package worked out this week calls for $170m. to be allocated for short-term debt repayment, as follows: $60m. by the Jewish Agency, $40m. by the banks, $45m. by the government, and $25m. by the members of the Moshav Movement. The other $150m. of the total $320m. debt will be paid back over six to seven years at reasonable terms.

tion from abroad. "The people of Austria correctly felt that someone was being abused here, someone who was not guilty of any crime, and that's why they voted for me."

"I still have to get used to these beautifully decorated rooms," Waldheim said, referring to the pre-World War I palace in which his offices are located. He is confident that with time and patience he will be able to achieve his goal of winning the acclaim of all Austrians and of restoring the image of Austria.

Jerry Lewis adds from London:
Conservative MP Robert Rhodes James, a historian who worked for Waldheim when he was UN secretary-general, claims to have "considerable evidence" linking Waldheim with wartime atrocities.

James asked Foreign Office Minister Timothy Renton in Parliament on Wednesday to investigate the case of Sgt. John Dryden, who was captured by Group E, Waldheim's army unit in Greece, and was subsequently interrogated and sent for "special treatment" by Waldheim.

Hart to heart with Hussein

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Prime Minister Shimon Peres will receive a full report from U.S. Senator Gary Hart (Dem-Colorado) about his meeting yesterday with King Hussein.

Hart left Jerusalem on Wednesday but changed his travel plans and went to Amman for surprise talks with Hussein, instead of leaving directly for the U.S. This was Hart's second meeting with Hussein within a week.

Sources in Jerusalem said that Hart had brought a message earlier this week from Hussein to Peres. He also shared with Peres his impressions of the Jordanian monarch's position on the peace process.

No details were given on the contents of the king's message.

CLASH

issued in Damascus by George Habash's Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and the Lebanese faction of the Syrian National Socialist Party called the attack "a sea-borne suicide operation" and claimed that their men had seized an IDF building on the outskirts of Nahariya during the clash.

The terrorists are using all possible means to try to attack Israel, said the head of Northern Command Aluf (Maj.-Gen.) Yossi Peled. Since they have been unsuccessful in penetrating the border over land, they have resumed their attempts via the sea. Peled praised the forces taking part in the action, saying that they had acted swiftly and aggressively. The measures taken to prevent terrorists from reaching Israel had proved their worth, he said on Army Radio.

Health Minister Mordechai Gur, a former chief of general staff, also praised the "professionalism" of the soldiers who took part in the action. Speaking after visiting the men wounded in the clash, Gur pointed out that attempts to infiltrate from the sea were not a new phenomenon, but fortunately the Navy had been successful of late in foiling such attempts.

Gur said the return of hundreds of terrorists to the Sidon area and the increasing influence of the Syrians in Lebanon could have had something to do with the latest incident. The South Lebanon Security Zone continued to prove its worth and this is why the terrorists are forced to turn to the sea he said.

Military sources pointed out that, during the past year, 35 terrorist gangs had been intercepted and stopped some distance north of the Israeli border by IDF and South Lebanese Army units. Only 11 gangs got as far as the border fence before being stopped.

Vice Premier Yitzhak Shamir, echoing a statement made earlier in the day by President Herzog, told Israel Army Radio: "In the midst of all our annoying debates on the Shin Bet affair, we have received a bloody reminder from the Arab terrorists that they are continuing their war against Israel's existence."

Shamir said Israel must concentrate its efforts on Arab terrorism "and not on internal battles aimed mainly at those who fight against terrorism. Perhaps this will open the eyes of those who are stirring up this affair."

Yesterday's incident began at about 2 a.m., when an Israel Navy Dabour patrol boat spotted the dinghy at the juncture of Israeli-Lebanese territorial waters. When the terrorist craft tried to flee towards the coast, the Dabour opened fire.

The terrorists beached their craft just north of the cliffs of Rosh Hanikra on the Lebanese side of the border, where they were immediately engaged by an Israeli infantry force. The approach down the steep cliffs was difficult and the heavily-armed terrorists were able to find cover among some rocks, enabling them to keep the IDF units at bay for some hours before they were killed.

IDF tracker Rahal was killed on the spot, while Ben-Dov was badly wounded and died after being evacuated.

The commander of the Israel Navy, Aluf Avraham Ben-Shushan, said earlier this month that Israel faced a growing threat from sea-borne terrorist attacks. He pointed out that the terrorist organizations had trained their fighters for sea operations in bases in Tunisia, Libya, Algeria and Lebanon. Over the past two years the Navy has killed 31 terrorists and captured others in seven incidents.

David Rudge adds:
Relatives and comrades of 25-year-old Mansour Rahal yesterday described him as "a brave man and a good friend."

The whole of his Beduin village was in mourning for the likeable tracker who had joined the IDF just four years ago. He saw action in the Lebanon war and was a member of an elite paratroop unit.

One of his relatives, who brought the sad news to his pregnant wife and young daughter, said Rahal's death would only serve to strengthen the blood pact between the Beduin and the Jewish state.

High Court to Yosef: stay out of politics

Rabbinical court judges may not be involved in politics and may not make their political views known, either openly or behind the scenes, the High Court ruled yesterday.

The court ruled that such activities undermine public confidence in the courts and do not befit the stature of judges.

The ruling came in response to a petition by MK Yair Tzaban (Mapam), who claimed that former chief rabbi Ovadia Yosef makes decisions for the Shas political party.

Tzaban said that Yosef, who serves as the head of the Council of Tora Sages and as a judge, was the one who decided that Shas should join the national unity government, and is the person who determines whether it should remain in the government.

Yosef's attorney responded that the function of a rabbinic leader in a community is to offer advice on day-to-day living. Yosef also claimed that his political involvement was limited to offering general advice but did not include specific political activity.

Justice Aharon Barak wrote: "A judge who offers advice on a political problem deeply undermines public confidence in the judicial system... The public expects that a judge will not express, either publicly or privately, openly or behind the scenes, his political views."

Tzaban welcomed the ruling and said he believed that Yosef and other judges would be forced to choose between political activism and the court. (Itim) gunships and missile boats offshore, according to an Associated Press report from Beirut. The dump was said to have burst into a "huge ball of flame," with a rapid chain of explosions rocking nearby Sidon.

News agency reports from Sidon quoted security sources as saying last night that at least 10 people had been killed or wounded.

After the morning bombings a state of alert was declared in Palestinian camps near Sidon, including Ein el-Hilwe and Mia Mia.

Israeli sources reported that hundreds of people had early fled from Tyre after the terrorist attack, fearing Israeli retaliation.

In the last year there have been 40 attempts to penetrate the South Lebanon Security Zone. About 30 of the attacks were carried out inside the Security Zone, and 10 were carried out on the Israeli border. All failed.

Prime Minister Peres last night described the IAF attack as a "quick and clean" operation. Addressing a public meeting in Tel Aviv only minutes after the planes had returned, Peres said that the attack was part of Israel's "continuous campaign" against terror.

The Security Zone had proved itself, Peres was quoted as saying on Israel Radio last night.

Nurses on the job

By MENACHEM SHALEV
For The Jerusalem Post

Doctors and patients around the country heaved a collective sigh of relief yesterday as nurses returned to work after 17 days on strike. (See page 4)

In Tel Aviv, representatives of the Health and Finance Ministries added their signatures to the agreement concluded Wednesday night between the Histadrut and the nurses. Negotiations are set to begin on Monday.

The agreement which ended the strike stipulates that negotiations be concluded within six weeks. "If nothing comes out of the talks, we will abandon hospitals completely," a leader of the hospital nurses, Dalia Ohana, said. "We will do so quickly, and nothing will force us to go back."

Health Ministry Director-General Dan Michaeli told The Jerusalem Post last night that the Treasury "is ready in principle" to allocate funds to improve nurses' working conditions.

Michaeli said his ministry was now trying to avert a strike threat by administrative and clerical workers at government hospitals. These workers have threatened to abandon hospitals next Tuesday if there is no progress in wage talks.

The central committee of the Histadrut Nurses' Union is to meet on Sunday afternoon to choose its representatives in the talks. If these representatives do indeed take part in the negotiations, the nurses will have achieved their goal of separate representation.

Most nurses were yesterday unhappy about the conclusion of the strike, feeling that it had not achieved any of its stated goals.

Nurses at Meir Hospital in Kfar Saba and Hadera's Hillel Yaffe Hospital actually rejected the agreement, terming it a "document of capitulation." None the less, nurses at these hospitals returned to work yesterday.

Hospitals quickly filled up again, after having discharged almost half of their patients during the strike. Out-patient and day care clinics were reopened, and long queues formed in most hospitals.

Petah Tikva's Beilinson Hospital reported a backlog of 700 operations, while Jerusalem's Hadassah Hospital in Ein Kerem announced that operating rooms would function normally today. As a rule, only emergency operations are carried out on Fridays at Hadassah.

Michaeli told The Post that his ministry would not hesitate to punish those who "issued unfounded declarations to the press about patients dying in the hospitals as a result of the strike."

Lea Levavi reports from Tel Aviv:
Health Minister Mordechai Gur told a press conference here yesterday that his ministry would strongly back nurses' demands. "We want nurses to work full time, so that patients get the proper care," he said.

Call for probe of Shamir in West Bank land case

By BARBARA AMOUYAL
For The Jerusalem Post

A Petah Tikva attorney, claiming that former prime minister Yitzhak Shamir asked West Bank land investors to contribute to the Likud in exchange for a promise of support in the setting up of West Bank settlements, yesterday called for an investigation of Shamir's alleged role in a West Bank land fraud case already before the courts.

According to attorney Avraham Oren, Shamir met in August 1982 with then deputy agriculture minister Michael Dekel, former Dekel aide Avi Tzur, and prominent West Bank land dealers including Shmuel Einav.

Following a discussion of the problems involved in West Bank settlement, according to Oren, Shamir told the land dealers that "If the Likud remains in power, it will help you. We will give high priority to the issue of West Bank settlement, even more so than we have done until now."

In a letter to Attorney-General Yosef Harish, Central District Prosecutor Edna Arbel and police Inspector-General David Kraus, Orenalleged that Shamir had requested campaign contributions in return for his promise to promote West Bank settlement. This "gave one a basis to suspect that [then prime minister] Shamir was allowing himself to be bribed."

Oren wrote that several land dealers did contribute "large sums" to the Likud.

Oren added, "I cannot understand why Shamir has not been questioned by police, despite material evidence gathered in the course of months of investigation of Dekel, Tzur, Einav and other land dealers." Einav is currently on trial in the Tel Aviv District Court on charges of bribing Tzur.

A police spokesman said Kraus would not act on Oren's complaint unless he received an order from Harish to do so.

A Justice Ministry spokesman said Harish has not yet had time to read Oren's complaint, let alone comment on it.

SHOOT-OUT

gun, wedged himself in a cleft in the rocks and was able to fire several bursts before he was eventually killed.

At the time the Israeli soldiers did not know exactly how many terrorists had come ashore. Only later, when the gun fight ended, did they discover the bodies of the four terrorists.

Sergean Hassan Nabid, who was with a separate group of soldiers scouring the cliff face, said he saw four dark shapes in front of him when a grenade suddenly exploded nearby.

"I turned and fired at one of the terrorists just as he was throwing another grenade," Nabid, from the Druse village of Beit Jann, told The Jerusalem Post.

The blast flung him into the air and he fell in the sea. Beduin tracker Mansour Jussef Rahal, who was killed in the shoot-out, had been alongside Nabid when the grenade exploded.

Nabid, who suffered superficial injuries to his arm, legs and back, managed to pull himself out of the water and make his own way to safety. He, too, was hospitalized at Nahariya.

The terrorists, armed with Kalashnikov rifles, a light machine-gun and grenades, came ashore not far from the Rosh Hanikra grotto. They landed 500 metres north of an Israeli holiday home used by policemen and their families. About 150 people were there at the time of the shoot-out.

The holidaymakers were wakened by the sounds of the battle and the light of flares. According to a worker at the site, many of them rushed outside to see what was happening. IDF troops later scoured the area, also checking the banana plantations of a nearby kibbutz.

The noise of the battle also woke up residents in the seaside resort of Nahariya, some 10 kilometres away.

The border crossing at Rosh Hanikra, which is mainly used by Unifil troops travelling back and forth to their posts in Lebanon, was closed until 10 a.m. yesterday. It is normally open at 7 a.m.

The road leading up to the border crossing was also closed and dozens of foreign and Israeli tourists had to wait before being allowed up to the observation point and the cable car leading down to the grotto.

By mid-morning everything was back to normal, with crowds of visitors wandering around, descending on the cable car to explore the popular underground caverns.

Syrians eye E. Beirut, too

DAMASCUS (Reuter). – Official Syrian newspapers said yesterday that Damascus-backed security moves in Moslem West Beirut should be extended to Christian East Beirut.

"The security plan has succeeded in West Beirut, and Lebanese in East Beirut are looking for the same step," the government daily Tishrin said.

But any Syrian move into East Beirut is likely to encounter resistance from the Christian sector's dominant militia, the Lebanese Forces, an anti-Syrian group which helped wreck a previous Syrian-mediated accord to end the 11-year civil war.

East Beirut's Christian Phalange party newspaper, Al-Amal, reported that President Amin Jemayel wanted a clear understanding with Damascus and was not opposed to the Syrian moves to restore order in the city's Moslem sector.

Meanwhile, Cairo Radio yesterday broadcast a strongly-worded commentary criticizing Syria's new deployment of troops in Beirut.

Back from land of the Shining Path

MK Uzi Baram

"Wherever we went, we were under armed guard," says MK Uzi Baram, secretary-general of the Labour Party, of his recent visit to Lima, Peru, at the head of the Israeli delegation to the Socialist International. "But I couldn't help thinking that, for a change, we, the Israelis, were not the target. Our guards were the target. We could have been killed merely by being close to them."

The SI congress was affected by the spreading civil strife between the government of Peruvian President Alain Garcia and the Maoist Shining Path guerrillas. Shortly after the congress began, the Peruvian armed forces crushed mutinies in three prisons, killing over 400 imprisoned terrorists. Many, if not all, of these were killed in cold blood.

Baram describes a country at war with itself and close to economic collapse. One night, the Israeli delegation dined in a restaurant in central Lima; two nights later, terrorists entered the restaurant and killed indiscriminately. An Israeli businessman living in Lima has hired the services of two Israeli bodyguards and drives around in an armoured car capable of driving right over an attacking vehicle.

After the prison massacre, SI President Willy Brandt convened delegation heads to discuss the continuation of the convention. A proposal by Baram formed the basis of a subsequent demand that Garcia's government establish a commission of inquiry into the massacre.

Baram, who met with Garcia, describes the 37-year-old neophyte president as "very handsome, very impressive, but a demagogue, a populist." His country is virtually crippled by its debt burden and the president finds himself trapped between the uncompromising Maoist terrorists and a trigger-happy army.

It was to show support for the embattled Garcia that the SI decided to hold its congress in Lima. But the delegates had not counted on finding themselves in the firing line or spending the better part of their time discussing Peru's problems, Baram says.

The result was the passing of several resolutions without debate. One of them was the resolution on the Middle East that commended the "positive and useful steps of the government headed by Shimon Peres."

The SI's "fervour in attacking Israel" is on the wane, Baram says, attributing the development to the "recent experience of several European countries with terror." An indication of Israel's improved standing was the approval of a resolution strongly condemning the "continued harassment" of Soviet Jewry. Significantly, the Arab delegation, that of Tunisia, abstained in the vote on the Soviet Jewry resolution.

Klinghoffer's daughters ired at sentences

Absent Achille Lauro terrorists get life, three others sentenced 15 to 30 years

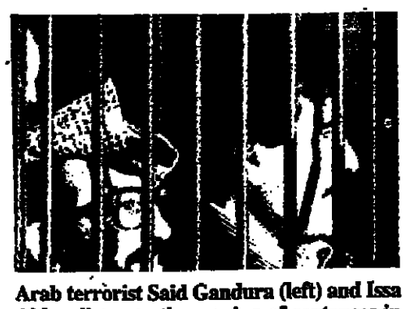

GENOA. – An Italian court yesterday sentenced three Palestinians, including Palestine Liberation Front leader Mohammed Abu Abbas, to life imprisonment for their part in the hijacking of the Achille Lauro cruise liner last year. Neither Abbas, who was freed by the Italian authorities after the hijack, nor two of his close associates who were also given life sentences, is in custody.

The court sentenced three captured hijackers to jail terms ranging from 15 to 30 years. The heaviest of these sentences went to the alleged ringleader, Magied al-Molqi, 23, accused of shooting to death Jewish-American Leon Klinghoffer and ordering a waiter to throw his body and his wheelchair into the sea.

Six of the defendants, the three given life sentences and the three captured hijackers, were all found equally responsible for Klinghoffer's death.

In New York, daughters of Klinghoffer, Lisa and Ilse, said yesterday they were outraged at the sentences given to the men who murdered their father.

"We are outraged. Our father's murderer is going to serve a few years and then he will be out," Ilse said on U.S. television.

The sisters said they would petition the U.S. government to seek the extradition of the three captured hijackers to be re-tried in America.

[Prime Minister Shimon Peres said yesterday he was sorry the hijackers who killed Klinghoffer did not get a harsher sentence, Israel Radio reported yesterday.]

Only five of the 15 defendants were in custody. One of them, Ahmad Marrouf al-Assadi, who had cooperated with the authorities, was absent from the courtroom, as he had been ever since he testified early in the trial. In Italy, defendants have the right not to attend their trials.

The terrorists sent to jail for life include (in addition to Abbas), Ozzudin Badrakkam, 39, thought to be the PLF's military chief, and Ziad el-Omar, 35, the PLF official who allegedly bought the cruise tickets for the hijackers.

Of the four terrorists present in court (besides al-Molqi), Ibrahim Abdel-latif, 20, was given two years and two months in jail; Mohammed Isa Abbas, 24, a cousin of Abu Abbas, six months, and Said Gandura, eight months.

Judge Lino Monteverde told reporters after the verdict that some leniency was shown the hijackers because they were young, had no previous record in Italy and had "grown up in the tragic conditions which the Palestinian people endure."

Monteverde said the charge of belonging to an armed terrorist band was dropped because the Palestine Liberation Front "has as its goal the restoration of a homeland to the Palestinian people," even though the hijacking itself was terrorism. (Reuter, AP)

In wake of Wednesday's bombing deaths

West Germany fears more terrorism

MUNICH (AP). – Bavarian police said yesterday they were interviewing eyewitnesses of the bombing death of a leading West German industrialist, while the country's interior minister warned there may be more terror attacks.

The leftist Red Army Faction has claimed responsibility for Wednesday's bombing that killed Siemens board member Karl-Heinz Beckurts, 56, and his driver. The Electronics and computer manufacturer is one of West Germany's biggest companies.

Police said in a statement released to the news media that they were interviewing several eyewitnesses, but declined to specify the number.

Meanwhile Interior Minister Friedrich Zimmermann told Deutschlandfunk Radio that he expected the Red Army Faction to carry out further attacks in West Germany.

"The attack came as no surprise to me. The Red Army Faction is picking up new active members from among its sympathizers," Zimmermann said.

The Red Army Faction is one of Europe's oldest leftist terror groups.

In Paris, an official said French and West German authorities are trying to determine whether the bombing of a police building in Paris and the bomb assassination of the Munich businessman are related.

Interior Minister Charles Pasqua told reporters that while the investigation of Wednesday's explosion in Paris was not favouring any particular theory, "nevertheless one cannot fail to make the parallel with the attack in Munich."

"We are in permanent contact with the Germans," Pasqua said.

No one has claimed responsibility for the Paris bombing.

Wladimir Struminski, adds from Bonn:

Wednesday's terror strike in Munich was not a surprise. German security organs knew that the Red Army Faction has been escalating terror for more than a year. Beckurt's name was found on a possible Faction hit-list two years ago. Beckurt was warned and Siemens laid on special security measures to protect him. Beckurts's car was accompanied by company security guards, all to no avail.

The message to German industrialists and other potential victims is that there is no absolute guarantee of survival once the Faction puts its finger on you.

The Red Army Faction is not the only left-wing terror organization in Germany.

There are other terrorist organizations, most of which are small and some with weird names, like "Away with the Shit" or "Wild Smoking Molecules."

Andreotti asked to form Italian government

ROME (AP). – President Francesco Cossiga yesterday asked Foreign Minister Giulo Andreotti, a former five-time premier, to form Italy's 45th government since World War II.

Andreotti, a 67-year-old Christian Democrat, was given the task by Cossiga following two weeks of unsuccessful attempts to revive Bettino Craxi's fallen five-party coalition.

Following the 30-minute meeting with Cossiga, Andreotti indicated he would seek to put together the same coalition of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Liberals, Social Democrats and Republicans.

However, when questioned by reporters, the premier-designate did not say whether he would consider other solutions.

Andreotti, one of Italy's most durable politicians, said he would meet with Christian Democrat leaders today.

His appointment comes two weeks after the resignation of Craxi, a Socialist, whose 34-month-old coalition lasted longer than any of Italy's previous post-war governments.

Andreotti is a vastly experienced, shrewd politician, famous for his knowledge of the intricate workings of Italian politics.

But political sources said he would need all his skill to find a way out of the intractable crisis caused by the resignation of Craxi's administration on June 27.

The collapse, prompted by the loss of a key secret vote in parliament, followed weeks of squabbling between the Socialists and the dominant Christian Democrats over which party should hold the premiership. (AP, Reuter)

Mitterrand, Kremlin agree on UN role in ME

MOSCOW (Reuter). – French President Francois Mitterrand said yesterday he had agreed with Kremlin leader Mikhail Gorbachev that the five permanent members of the UN Security Council could prepare a Middle East peace conference.

Mitterrand told a news conference after three days of talks with Gorbachev that the Soviet leader had suggested that an international conference could be prepared by a committee made up of the Council members.

Mitterrand noted that he had supported the idea of an international meeting for a peace settlement for two years and "It would be a good idea that the five permanent Security Council members supervise these negotiations."

He said "Obviously...other people, other countries and organizations involved" would take part in an eventual full conference.

Mitterrand's spokeswoman Michele Gendreau-Massaloux said the idea was still in an exploratory phase.

Mitterrand said there was still an obstacle to a superpower summit and he could not predict if it would take place.

Asked about U.S. moves to abandon the 1979 Salt-2 Long-range arms treaty at the end of this year, Mitterrand said: "If we are talking about treaties let's not start by scrapping those that already exist."

Mitterrand implicitly criticized the Kremlin on human rights. He said France believed in the principle that all people should have the right to freedom of movement. He said he did not seek to interfere in any state's affairs, but wanted "to make sure this right is recognized."

The summit issue loomed large because President Ronald Reagan asked Mitterrand in New York last Friday to pass on his thinking to Gorbechev.

The Soviet leader, hailed by Mitterrand yesterday as "a man of his time, insists that Reagan must be ready for an accord on arms control before their second summit, due this year.

Georges Ibrahim Abdullah, the suspected leader of a Lebanese terrorist group, is led from a Lyon court yesterday after he was sentenced to four years in jail for possessing arms and explosives, holding false passports and association with criminals. Abdullah, 35, must still face a Paris court for complicity in the 1982 murder of Israel Embassy counsellor Ya'acov Bar-Simantov, and U.S. military attache Charles Ray. (Reuter telephoto)

Johnson mounting a threat to Lewis' 100m supremacy

MOSCOW (Reuter). – Carl Lewis's supremacy in the sprint looks under serious threat from his long-time rival Ben Johnson of Canada who beat him at the Goodwill Games Wednesday night and is convinced he can go on winning.

"I am going to be hard to beat right now if I am running faster than Lewis," said Johnson after winning the 100 metres gold medal in 9.95 seconds – equalling the second-fastest time in history and setting the best at low altitude.

Johnson, 0.02 seconds off the world record held by Calvin Smith of the U.S. signalled his challenge by beating Olympic champion Lewis in 10.01 seconds in the opening Grand Prix meeting at San Jose in May.

The win, with Nigerian Chidi Imo taking the silver medal and Lewis the bronze, avenged Johnson's defeat at Los Angeles in 1984 when he finished third behind American Lewis but still recorded a place in history as the first Canadian in 28 years to win an Olympic medal.

Hurdler Edwin Moses continued a remarkable career which has given him four world records at 400 metres with his 111th consecutive win, clocking 47.96 seconds.

Moses, who missed last season with a knee injury, said his goal now was to run in under 47 seconds. "I am training in a place in Finland, where it is very remote and there is not much to do but train," he said. "I know what it takes to achieve my goal."

LATE RESULT: Cheryl Miller scored 18 points and Katrina McClain added 17 as the U.S. women's basketball team handed the Soviet Union their first loss in international competition in 28 years, 83-60, last night for the gold medal.

Carrick burst gives Yorkshire Natwest win

LONDON (Reuter). – A three-wicket burst by Phil Carrick steered Yorkshire to a 20-run win over Middlesex in their Natwest Trophy second round clash yesterday.

Slow left-armer Carrick, withdrawn from the attack after conceding 15 runs in his first two overs of the morning, took his second chance in style with three for four off nine balls.

Middlesex, resumed yesterday with six wickets in hand, requiring another 83 from 18 overs to clinch a quarter-final place against Sussex. But they were dismissed with 15 balls remaining.

Leicestershire duly completed a six-wicket victory over Gloucestershire at Bristol in the other match held over from yesterday. Their victory target was 178 and they needed just 12.1 overs to add the 52 runs necessary to book a home tie with Lancashire.

Boy George said kicking drug habit

LONDON (AP). – Boy George, the British rock singer noted for his extravagant costumes and makeup, is undergoing two weeks of treatment for heroin addiction, the head of his record company said yesterday.

Richard Branson, chairman and founder of Virgin Records, said Boy George sought help for his addiction and started treatment on Monday at an undisclosed medical centre in England.

"He's over the worst of it," Branson said, referring to Boy George's attempt to overcome his drug addiction. "He's doing very well."

The disclosure follows the arraignment on Wednesday of four people, including Boy George's brother, Kevin O'Dowd, charged with conspiring to supply heroin to the singer.

Fellow rock star Marilyn, 23, whose real name is Peter Robinson and is a close friend of Boy George, was arraigned at the same time on a charge of possessing heroin.

They were arrested on Tuesday after narcotics officers raided Boy George's home and five other locations in London. Scotland Yard said no drugs were found at the singer's home, but said police were trying to trace the singer so that they could interview him.

Branson said Boy George, 25, whose real name is George O'Dowd, telephoned him on Sunday night and said he wanted treatment for drug addiction.

SOUTH AFRICA

what he called "candid, open and direct" talks with Zimbabwean Prime Minister Robert Mugabe on South Africa, told a news conference in Harare that Britain remained opposed to the use of violence and the imposition of international economic sanctions to force Pretoria to abandon apartheid racial segregation laws.

But Howe failed to shift the former guerrilla leader's view that economic sanctions must be imposed against South Africa. "There was a familiar division of opinion," a senior British government source said after the 75-minute meeting.

Howe, on a mission on behalf of the 12-nation European Community, left yesterday afternoon to confer in Maputo with Mozambique leader Samora Machel. He was scheduled to leave today for London.

"The path to peace cannot stay open forever. That underlines the crucial importance of getting the South African government and black South African leaders into discussion with each other," Howe said, adding this was the main thrust of his current peace shuttle on behalf of the European Community.

Howe also announced that he was due to hold talks with South African President P.W. Botha on July 23 and 29, and with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz before the end of the month.

Britain had hoped to arrange the Howe-Botha talks this week, but South Africa, in a move widely interpreted as a snub, said it could not arrange an early meeting because Botha was too busy.

Debate over bill on suspects' names

By BARBARA AMOUYAL
For The Jerusalem Post

The draft bill banning publication of suspects' names, approved Monday by the ministerial committee on legislation, has pitted proponents of a free press against those who insist on an individual's right to privacy.

As Justice Minister Moda'i prepares to submit the draft for cabinet approval and subsequent Knesset debate in the coming weeks, lobbyists and special interest groups have mobilized to sway MKs before the final Knesset vote.

The draft would make it illegal to publish names of suspects until they have been charged, or held in remand for 30 days.

The vote in the committee was 7:3, with ministers Yitzhak Moda'i, Moshe Nissim, Haim Corfu, Yitzhak Peretz, Yigael Hurvitz, Yosef Burg and Avraham Sharir voting in favour and ministers Moshe Shahal, Amnon Rubinstein and Arye Nehamkin voting against (Police Minister Haim Bar-Lev abstained).

The Jerusalem Post spoke with several politicians, professors and press representatives about the proposed "Law to Ban Publication of Suspects' Names, 1986."

Police Minister Haim Bar-Lev: "This draft will not solve any problems. I am against laws that don't work to correct undesirable situations and seem to damage the freedom of the press."

Former judge Asher Felix Landau: "I support the publication ban. Until police can formulate specific charges against a citizen, the public shouldn't know about an arrest. I have always opposed trial by the press, and I hope that this draft law will be respected and obeyed, once passed."

Hanna Zemer, Davar editor and presidium member of the Israel Editors' Committee: "I reject the draft from both a professional and personal standpoint. It is a blatant infringement of freedom of the press and, to the best of my knowledge, is unheard of in any other democratic nation. The Israel Editors' Committee, the Association of Israel Journalists and other bodies had been making positive headway with the politicians to work out a way to preserve this elementary freedom while at the same time enforcing journalistic ethics. Moda'i has brought everything back to square one."

Deputy Defence Minister Michael Dekel, who underwent a highly-publicized police grilling last December about the West Bank land fraud scandal: "Basically, I support the law. Until a man is charged, the press should not be allowed to initiate a public lynching. I personally was treated rather fairly by the print media, but television did enough damage for a lifetime. Somehow, I feel this draft proposal will protect others in similar positions from getting hurt."

Prof. Steven Goldstein, specialist in civil procedure at the Hebrew University School of Law: "I'm basically against any threat to the freedom of the press. Although one must consider the damage that may be done to certain individuals who were falsely arrested, I feel it's more important to preserve the elementary freedom of the press. There must be a way to bridge the two extremes, but legislation is definitely not the solution. Perhaps the Israel Press Council should exert more pressure on journalists and editors to abide by a defined code of ethics."

Dr. Yehoshua Rotenstreich, president of the Israel Press Council: "The proposed law is self-defeating. On the one hand, it will not prevent the public from learning about arrests, if editors feel that the information is in the public interest. On the other hand, the proposed law will greatly damage the international image of the State of Israel. It is dangerous for our country to be linked, by this preposterous proposal, to countries like Chile and South Africa.

Minister of Absorption Ya'acov Tsur believes the bill is an attempt by the political leadership to protect itself from the press. He called upon the media to take measures to police itself. "If the bill reached the Knesset, he would not vote for it," he said.

Back to normal at Hadassah

By MENACHEM SHALEV
For The Jerusalem Post

Hadassah Hospital Ein Kerem was once again brimming with activity at noon yesterday, only a few hours after nurses returned to their posts.

Queues quickly formed at the reception desks of the clinics, most of which had been closed during the 17-day strike. "The patients are streaming back," read a note handed to the hospital's director, Dr. Zvi Stern. Patients and doctors alike were overjoyed. "Things will be much better now," said a doctor in the psychiatric ward.

The main actors in the two-and-a-half week drama, the nurses themselves, were the only ones who were not smiling. They knew they had lost the battle. "I keep asking myself whether the strike was in vain," said Lea Sagi, the head nurse of the Orthopedic department, "but I'm happy to be back at work. I'm not happy about what we've achieved."

The hospital's emergency ward was busy again, but no more than on regular days. Potential patients, heeding Health Ministry instructions, stayed away if they didn't have a referral from a doctor. One of the exceptions was a young man with an injured leg. "I've been in pain for two weeks now," he said, "and I hope that someone will at last take care of me."

Moshe Cohen has been sitting near his nephew's bed for three weeks. "I'll still be here," he said, "but now, I can be a spectator. I don't have to worry any more."

Cries of joy were heard in the psychiatric ward when Simha Cohen, the head nurse, showed up for the regular departmental staff meeting at 9.30 a.m. "I'm so happy," she said. "During the strike I was torn apart. I suffered my first ulcer attack in 15 years." She adds, "The strike went on for too long. We had no intention of killing anyone. Whenever a patient was in critical condition, we immediately declared that his bed was a 'unit,' where a nurse could be stationed in keeping with the strike guidelines."

Hospital director Stern was concerned about the financial losses caused by the strike, which he estimated at about $1.5 million. "In the meantime," he said, "we are hospitalizing patients as fast as we can. In addition to the medical considerations, it is a financial necessity for us. We've 'invited' all our patients back."

A doctor in the hospital's Oncology Department sounded a sombre note amidst the general relief. "The real damage was caused to those who were discharged," she said, "and only now will we find out what these patients have suffered."

Yoram Gazit adds from Tel Aviv:

Patients and doctors at Ichilov Hospital here were considerably relieved to see nurses back on the job.

The nurses, bitter that their demands had not been met, quickly got to grips with the work that had accumulated during their absence.

Liat Freidman, the hospital's head nurse, said she was frustrated by the results of the strike, and by the way the press had covered it.

"I think almost everyone misunderstood the nurses' problems and their goals in the strike," Friedman said. The poor working conditions force nurses to leave the profession and make it difficult to attract replacements, she said.

Strike set off trauma in medical world

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. – "It will take a new generation of hospital staff to return the medical profession to its proper place. The abandonment of the hospitals by the nurses, and by the doctors in their strike before them, undermined the hierarchical and moral structures of medicine, which will be very hard to mend," Prof. Yosef Brandes, the director of Rambam Hospital, said here yesterday.

"The strike will have grave long-term implications. The young doctors and nurses have experienced a trauma which erased the line between what may and may not be done in this profession," he said.

The highest value of Judaism, the sanctity of life, has been violated. These strikes have given legitimacy to abandoning patients and the profession's ethics have been hurt.

Brandes believes that strikes must not be allowed in this profession.

"All differences must be solved by arbitration," he said.

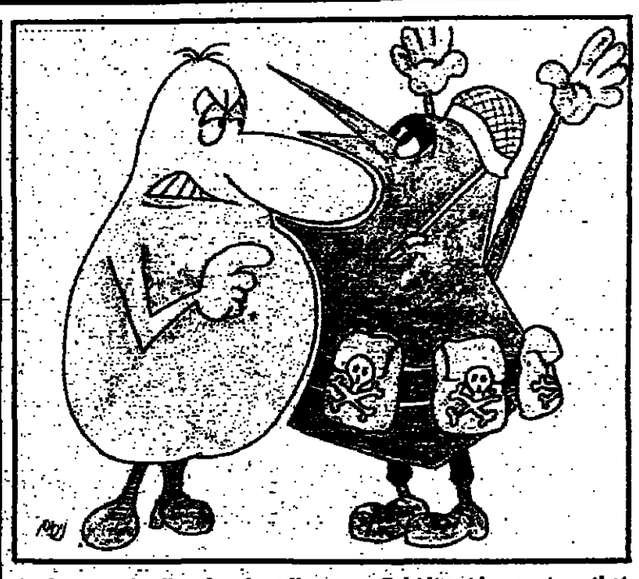

Health Minister Mordechai Gur, who arrived at the hospital shortly after Brandes spoke to the press, took a much more lenient view of the nurses' strike.

He said that the nurses had not really abandoned the hospitals and "though their strike was not authorized by the Histadrut, it was a responsible one."

He conceded that patients had been exposed to "pain and suffering." But no one had died as a result of the strike, he said.

The doctors who had claimed there were such deaths must come forward with specific details so that these "grave" charges can be investigated, he said.

He pledged his maximum assistance to the nurses – short of violating the national wage agreement or harming the government's economic policy – so that their negotiations could have the best possible results. "We want them to achieve working conditions that will assure patients the best treatment possible and encourage nurses to work in the hospitals," he said.

A project to ease kids' anxieties about Aids

By BERNARD JOSEPHS
Jerusalem Post Reporter

A project to teach children about the killer disease Aids has been provisionally approved by the Education Ministry, and may be introduced experimentally in several Jerusalem schools in the next school year.

The organizers say the idea is to reduce pupils' anxiety about the disease by explaining what it is and how it can be prevented.

They add that the Jerusalem district of the Education Ministry has provisionally agreed to a pilot project in some of the capital's schools, and a specially selected group of children will be invited to take part in a trial run.

"Aids is today's 'front page' disease," said Inon Schenker, the project's organizer. Children read about it, see TV programmes about it and hear their parents talk about it. The result is growing anxiety."

Schenker, a graduate student at the Hebrew University's school of public health, and head of Perah, an Education Ministry-backed health education programme in Jerusalem, reported that, in a survey of 2,000 pupils, almost all said they wanted to know more about Aids.

The project team also canvassed school principals and teachers in the capital. Was such a course necessary, they asked? Seventy-five per cent of those who returned the questionnaire answered affirmatively.

The programme will be taught by senior medical, dental and public health students from the Hebrew University, as part of the Jerusalem schools' preventive medicine course.

The project is aimed at 11- to 15-year-olds, and the approach is to explain Aids through its effect on the immune system rather than dwelling on its sexual connotations. "After consulting with psychologists," explained Schenker, "we concluded that a sexual approach to the subject would not be appropriate for this age group."

The course starts off with a game that reveals the working of the immune system, which is destroyed by Aids. A large circle is drawn in the school yard and three children stand in the centre. They represent bug-killing white blood cells.

Other children, playing the role of viruses and bacteria, have to enter the circle and snatch a white rag without being "caught" by the cells.

This is followed up by cartoon slides showing the workings of the body's defences in more detail, and the success of medicine in combating diseases as deadly as Aids. "By using cartoons we thought we could take the edge off the fear," said Schenker.

Finally, the disease itself is dealt with. The children learn how it is transmitted and how people can be infected. But the stress is placed on how to avoid it.

A role-play session, in which the children play the part of someone with the disease or their parents, friends and teachers, is also incorporated, to encourage them to openly discuss and analyze their feelings about Aids.

Schenker concluded: "The fact is that at present there is no proven cure for Aids, nor a vaccine. There are about 300 children in the world who have the disease and the only way we can fight it is by prevention. This is what the course is about."

Elder statesman welcomes controversy

By DAVID KRIVINE
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Philip Klutznik, who has just completed a one-month stay in Israel, will be 80 next birthday. He rates the title of elder statesman on two counts. In his service to the American government he became federal housing commissioner while still in his thirties, sat later on the U.S. delegation to the UN with the rank of ambassador, and was finally appointed secretary of commerce to president Jimmy Carter.

In his service to the Jewish community, he has presided at different times over B'nai B'rith, the United Jewish Appeal and the World Jewish Congress. Besides all this, he is a wealthy businessman.

Serving two masters is impressive. Usually people sacrifice one of their careers to the other. "If you are a good Jew," he smiles, "you can do both." He stresses that to be a citizen of the U.S. and to be a lover of Israel are two separate roles "but they are not incompatible.

"We have matured in the States since I was a boy. We no longer behave timidly as ghetto Jews. We are overwhelmingly in favour of the security of Israel and consider it important for our welfare as Jews. I don't find myself apologizing for that.

"There is no unity of views among American Jews on other topics. But we have a solid bloc of support for Israel."

Klutznik has criticized Israeli policies, calling for peace talks with the PLO, and that has aroused objections. He grins: "A rabbi wrote to me from a congregation I once belonged to. He said I have been called progressive. I have been called statesmanlike, now I am called controversial – what more can I want?"

Ought he to be speaking his mind about travel? He gives the matter consideration: "I am entitled to my opinions when I agree, so I should be entitled to them when I disagree as well, right?" He corrects himself. "Disagree is too strong a word. I have no illusion that I can change anything in Israel. Only those who live here and vote here can do that.

"You know, I have met Arabs who agree with me and disagree with their own governments. I have met Americans like that. If you and I get cross because of a clash of opinions between us, it is a sign that we have not matured enough in our relations."

Klutznik takes the matter further. He has witnessed dissension enough during his stay here between religious and secular, and sees nothing wrong with that. "Once upon a time such clashes were avoided for fear of damaging the state. That fear no longer exists."

Philip Klutznik

Polemics are a good thing, although they must be kept in the right perspective. Klutznik is among other things chairman of the Memorial Foundation for Jewish Culture – and Rabbi Menahem Porush is on the board. "He does not see eye to eye with me on religious issues. No amount of talk will change his view of the halacha. But we agree on other things.

"People are free to assert their views and campaign for them publicly: that is a sign the country is growing up. Committing mayhem is another matter. Setting fire to synagogues and tearing up holy books – these are serious offences. They are not a breach of religion, they are a breach of democracy."

Controversy should always be welcome, "but the ground may be lost under the canopy of these excesses." He sticks to his belief that people whose views diverge even over basic issues do not have to be enemies. On the contrary, "I belong to all three of the religious congregations, Orthodox, Conservative and Reform; and to a fourth one as well, the Reconstructionists. They all pray to the same God and, his eyes crinkled humorously, "none of them kicked me out."

The Reconstructionists seem to have influenced him most. "Mordechai Kaplan's book Judaism as Civilization changed my life. I have," he added, "one of his volumes with me right now."

In conclusion: "A nation is not a democracy if differences are forbidden and Israel has no future if it is not a democracy."

Is he disappointed with this country since it has moved to the right? The question is partly political and Klutznik skilfully sidesteps that part. "I have lived most of my adult life fighting for causes without being sure they could be achieved. The greatest of them was the creation of the Jewish state and that was achieved. But we did not dream the state would cope as it did. We did not anticipate it would even be able to feed itself."

It would have been crazy to think otherwise. "What right had we to expect that after 2,000 years of dispersion the Jewish people could build a perfect homeland within a single generation?

"I see the day when more Jews will come here because they won't be urged to. My children have made friends in Israel and visit them and exchange views without any inhibitions. That is how it should be." One of Klutznik's sons has developed a computer project in association with Bar-Ilan University and has just been awarded an honorary degree there. Another son is member of the UJA Young Leadership Group in his hometown.

Meanwhile, Klutznik has his own views and sticks to them. "I believe that until Israel can make peace on its northern and eastern borders it will not have accomplished its full potential. Peace can only be made by the government of Israel. But it is painful to look around and see what foreign markets would be open if there were peace.

"A price has to be paid for a settlement with your neighbours and only the people here can decide if it is worth paying." He thinks Israel will not reach a solution by sitting down and waiting for the situation to change. "What I have been trying to say is that unless you have a clear plan for settling the Arab-Israel dispute and unless you press it forward, nothing will happen.

Does Klutznik think the World Jewish Congress did well to rake up Austrian President Kurt Waldheim's past? He would not say. "I'm still honorary president of the WJC and I didn't take part in the activities leading to those decisions.

"I don't understand how he got to be elected and re-elected five years later – without any of the information now available having been made known. I don't understand it. There is something missing here and until all is clarified, I can't take a position on the subject of Waldheim's credentials."

Our conversation shifted to economics. Klutznik thinks the U.S. has gone too far in glorifying private enterprise to the exclusion of all government intervention. "We have lost out," he says. He once was co-chairman (with the secretary of labour) of a commission on the steel industry. "The continuous-casting process was an American invention in 1958. The sponsor couldn't sell it to his countrymen so he sold it to the Japanese.

"The same happened with robots." The problem is a financial one, private firms cannot afford the big loans necessary to develop an entirely new process. Result: "We have more unused high technology in the U.S. than in any other country in the world."

Governments must help, he concludes, as is done in other parts of the world; or at least they must not hinder. "Our automobile industry was required by law to reduce harmful emissions. The cost of the necessary modifications was prohibitive, reaching $35 million. Two car manufacturers tried to economize by collaborating and an anti-trust suit was clamped on them."

I don't recommend government intervention as a general practice, but when we lose ground in world trade that is the time to give a hand." He recalls the news of the Russian sputnik in 1957. It was a shock. The Americans found they had been left behind. "Since then we have spent $100 billion on the outer-space programme. We have got ahead of everybody because the government did the necessary investing."

Klutznik makes these points because he is conscious of the huge and worrying deficit in U.S. foreign trade. He evidently does not like to leave problems unsolved. "The free world cannot afford a trade war," he observes, "so we are looking for solutions."

He resigned from business at the age of 65 and has been devoting himself to good causes ever since. The youngest of his four sons looks after the family investments. Klutznik made his present visit to attend meetings of three different organizations with which he is associated: the Memorial Foundation for Jewish Culture, Beth Hatefutsoth and the International Centre for University Teaching of Jewish Civilization – all three agencies for the preservation of the Jewish heritage.

But another occasion also necessitated his arrival here – the bar mitzva of one of his 15 grandchildren, held at the Western Wall. "Twenty-one members of our family came over for the occasion," he states proudly, "and they didn't worry about terrorism either."

Why travel tax bill has run into obstacles

By ARYEH RUBINSTEIN

Uriel Lynn's bill to exempt yordim (emigrants) who visit Israel from the $120 travel tax ran into deep water in the Knesset this week, and when its defeat appeared likely Lynn (Likud-Liberals) requested a deferment of the vote.

The bill has already passed two hurdles: the preliminary reading in the plenum (the first stage for a member's bill) and its referral by the Finance Committee back to the House for its first reading, which was what took place on Monday. Formally, the bill is no longer Lynn's alone but that of the committee.

No fewer than 16 members spoke in the debate, and their arguments for and against covered a wide range. Surprisingly, Lynn based his case mainly on the need to rescue the tourism and hotel industry from their present doldrums.

Tourism for the first five months of the year was almost 18 per cent below the same period last year (down 48 per cent from the U.S.), Lynn said. Tentative figures indicate a decline of 35 per cent for June. At this rate, he calculated, only 720,000 tourists would come here by air this year, compared with 1,079,000 in 1985.

The object of the tax was not to raise revenue, Lynn said, but to dissuade Israelis from going abroad and taking out foreign currency. There was no intention of putting obstacles in the way of would-be visitors to Israel.

The charge that granting the exemption to yordim would encourage emigration is nonsense, Lynn said. No one is going to leave Israel and live abroad for seven years so that when he comes back to visit he won't have to pay the travel tax.

This did not stop Chaika Grossman (Mapam) from asserting that not only would the exemption encourage emigration, but would appear to be bowing down to the person who leaves the country and then condescends to visit. There are things that have symbolic significance, she said. "How can we pass a bill exempting an Israeli citizen residing abroad [the term for yored that appears in the bill] from the travel tax, when Israeli citizens living here must pay it?"

Other speakers agreed that Israel should not award "prizes" to yordim. Dan Tichon (Likud-Liberals) was one. Geula Cohen (Tehiya) was another. "The bill wants to help the yored, to draw him closer to the state of Israel," she said. "Maybe we should go one step farther and have the whole state 'go down' to him? And what on earth is this new category: 'Israeli citizens residing abroad'?"

But the main argument against the bill was that so many other groups, more deserving than yordim have been denied exemption.

Yitzhak Artzi (Alignment-Independent Liberals) specified new immigrants who want to visit their families, discharged soldiers who want to travel abroad and Israeli students studying abroad. He was for the bill but wanted these groups added.

Other speakers noted that even people going abroad for medical treatment get no automatic exemption. Most of them have their requests rejected by the competent boards, it was said.

Ariel Weinstein (Likud-Liberals) urged a substantial reduction in the tax for young Israelis visiting Poland. "I have seen how a visit to that country has changed the entire outlook of young people who had been alienated from the Jewish experience and did not appreciate the significance of living in Eretz Yisrael."

The most enthusiastic supporter of the bill was Benny Shalita (Likud-Liberals), though he thought that Lynn's aid-to-tourism argument was far-fetched. But the exemption would serve to intensify the yored's ties with Israel, he said. The drafters of the travel tax law did only half a job when they granted exemption to the children of yordim up to the age of 18, Shalita said.

Yerida is a fact of life, Shalita said, and recognizing that does not mean we condone it. Addressing Geula Cohen, he said: "If you want to fight yerida, don't fight those who have already left. Fight it on your own doorstep, here, so that others won't leave."

Shevah Weiss (Alignment) asked what a tax of $120 had to do with encouraging either emigration or immigration. Or with Zionism. Only one question should be considered: how many yordim are actually deterred from visiting because of the tax? If it can be shown that the number is substantial, the bill should pass, he said. Not because the yordim will then fill our hotels or otherwise aid the economy, but just to help them.

No more cleaning classes, teachers tell education chief

By BERNARD JOSEPHS

Lazy pupils, unwilling to wield a mop and help clean their schools, were rapped over the knuckles yesterday by teachers who said they were not willing to continue as unpaid cleaning supervisors.

The teachers told Education Ministry Director-General Eliezer Shmueli they had had enough of the scheme, which came into force after the sacking of large numbers of cleaners due to budget cuts.

Last school year, they said, they had stayed behind after hours and without pay to supervise the student cleaning groups. But their charges were reluctant and the task proved impossible.

"We told Shmueli that we are not prepared to carry on with it," said Hanna Maron, spokeswoman for the Association of Secondary School Teachers.

She added: "The fact is that we were supposed to supervise the cleaning, but we ended up doing much of it ourselves.

"The pupils wouldn't cooperate. If, for instance, one staff member was in charge of cleaning several classes, by the time the first was finished, the pupils from other classes had run off.

"We were only supposed to spend 12 hours a year doing this work, but it took us much longer than that. We often ended up washing the floors ourselves and the children really enjoyed that."

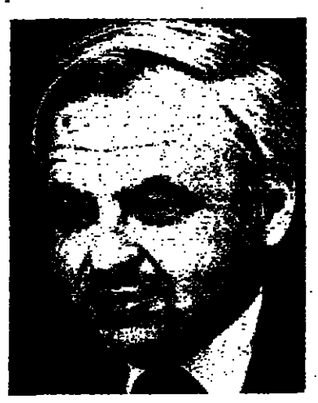

She said that many schools were now in a filthy state. "The situation in some places is unbearable."

Maron reported that Shmueli appealed to the teachers to carry on with their task, saying that it had saved the financially-strapped ministry $10 million last year.

"But we told him that we just couldn't do it any more."

What is behind the latest American charges of Israeli misdeeds in the U.S.? Is there 'a plot to get' Israel? Jerusalem Post Washington Correspondent WOLF BLITZER reports.

Now it's the bomb: a cluster of complaints

Ambassador Meir Rosenne. (Click 2000)

U.S. Attorney-General Meese. (Camera Press)

U.S. ATTORNEY-General Edwin Meese is very upset over suspicions of some high Israeli officials that he might somehow be personally orchestrating a series of unfavourable publicity for Israel in the U.S. "Nothing could be more absurd than such allegations," he told The Jerusalem Post.

The Attorney-General, who served as President Ronald Reagan's White House Chief of Staff during the first four years of this administration, said that he was doing everything within his power to ensure that "the highest professional standards" are met by the Justice Department in investigating the alleged Israeli improprieties. He described the anti-Israel press leaks as "obviously unacceptable."

One of Meese's senior aides, in explaining Meese's reaction, said that the Attorney-General wanted the suspicions against him "nipped in the bud." The aide said: "He's very taken aback by all of this."

Meese, who recently visited Israel for a week, sees himself as a strong supporter. But the fact is that he cannot completely control his own bureaucracy. He can issue directives to his staff to stop publication of allegations against Israel – and he has. But it is not always possible to make sure that those orders are obeyed.

U.S. officials are hoping that Israel can appreciate this fact of life. After all, Israeli leaders cannot always control their own bureaucracies either.

Some of the more sophisticated Israeli officials in Washington are sensitive to this problem, but others, with their colleagues in Jerusalem, clearly are not. This second group of officials see the series of anti-Israeli stories in Washington as part of a plot "to get Israel." There are all sorts of conspiracy theories being circulated; perhaps Meese and other administration officials are still angry at Israel for embarrassing Reagan in 1981 during the Saudi Awacs debate. This is said to be their way of getting even.

When Justice Minister Yitzhak Moda'i was recently in Washington, he raised the matter of the damaging leaks with Meese. Later, Moda'i told reporters that if anyone could understand the nature of unauthorized leakes in a democratic society with an aggressive and free press, it was Israel, where unauthorized disclosures are also part of the general landscape.

But despite Moda'i's sympathy and Meese's reassurances, there is little doubt that there are indeed influential elements in the Reagan administration – in fact within the Justice Department – who are only too happy to try to embarrass Israel. This has been, of course, very apparent during the unfolding of the Pollard spy scandal these months. Most of the most damaging reports in the U.S. news media came from the Justice Department and various agencies under its overall control, including the Office of the U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

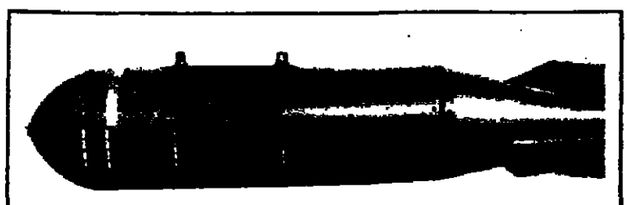

They and other U.S. law-enforcement officers – in marked contrast to the State Department and the White House – have also been in the forefront in circulating embarrassing information – as far as Israel is concerned – in a whole variety of separate investigations involving alleged Israeli arms smuggling operations.

There have been a series of such incidents, including the allegedly illegal transfer to Israel last year of krytron nuclear switching devices and the subsequent sale of restricted tank barrel technology. In addition, there are two separate cases currently before U.S. courts involving retired Israeli army officers – including a general – indicted on charges of conspiring to sell weapons to Iran. The damage of the Pollard affair has merely reinforced the impression that Israel is guilty.

This past week, Israeli officials at the Defence Ministry's purchasing mission in New York were accused of trying to smuggle technology and equipment necessary for the manufacture of cluster bombs in Israel. Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy, in notifying Ambassador Meir Rosenne of the five-month U.S. Justice Department, Customs Service and Pentagon investigation, said that the U.S. government would try to keep a lid on the story. The investigation would be conducted quietly, without the fanfare of newspaper headlines.

But within hours, CBS News broadcast a report, including all of the various details, on its nightly television programme. The rest of the American news media quickly followed. The CBS report came from its Justice Department correspondent.

As a result, despite a formal denial of the allegations by Defence Minister Rabin, Israel once again finds itself accused of committing another sordid act against the U.S., its best friend and major ally. And in the process, the perception in America of Israel as ungrateful and treacherous is strengthened. The damage is very real, Israeli officials concede. There is a cumulative impact; each episode weakens Israel's image. Israel's most active enemies can simply sit back, smile and gloat.

An Israel-made cluster bomb. This picture was taken in 1981.

TO A CERTAIN degree, Israel has itself to blame for much of the most recent allegations.

Prime Minister Peres quickly apologized for the Pollard business and promised that it would never happen again. But there is still a general sense in Washington that Israel did not really come clean. It did not, for example, provide U.S. investigators with all of the necessary information, including the role of Air Force Colonel Aviam Sella, Pollard's original "handler." There was also no serious punishment of those supposedly "rogue" operatives involved.

"Israelis are always pushing the limits," said one knowledgeable Washington observer. "Then they scream foul play when they get caught."

The latest incident involving the cluster bombs technology reportedly occurred late in 1984 and early in 1985 – months before Pollard, a U.S. naval intelligence analyst, was arrested outside the Israeli Embassy in Washington on espionage charges. But the actual investigation of this possible arms or expertise smuggling operation apparently did not get off the ground until after Pollard's arrest.

American agents are said to have stumbled across this cluster bomb affair when they stepped up their investigations into the activities of the Defence Ministry's purchasing mission in New York – again, only after Pollard's arrest. That office, headed by Aluf (Res.) Avraham Ben-Yosef, is responsible for procuring military equipment in the U.S. At its disposal is much of the $1.8 billion in annual U.S. military aid appropriated for Israel. The office has over 200 workers. They go around the country, looking for the best weaponry available. One of their most important assignments is to learn of the latest technology on the market and to make sure, that if it is useful, it becomes part of Israel's inventory.

U.S. officials have long suspected that these Israeli officials, at times, "bend the law." But no hard evidence has ever been presented. Israeli officials concede that before the Pollard case, Israel may occasionally have gone too far in pressing for some new military technology. But they maintain that it was not done out of malice against the U.S.; only to strengthen Israel's overall security.

In the cluster bomb case, U.S. officials have told journalists that they have sealed affidavits demonstrating that Israeli Defence Ministry representatives – who do not have diplomatic immunity – coached American manufacturers on how to skirt around existing export controls in order to make sensitive and restricted technology and equipment available for Israel. Israel has strongly denied any wrongdoing.

But there is no doubt that the Israeli defence establishment has been assiduous in seeking more and more information or hardware. In the process, U.S. officials said, they have tested the limits of American tolerance.

"We both have a problem with our bureaucracies," said one State Department official, referring to Israel's desire to squeeze the U.S. for more and more weapons, and the U.S. law-enforcement agencies who want to go after Israel as thoroughly as possibly, irrespective of the potential damage to the overall American-Israeli relationship.

It would be a serious mistake for Israel to simply conclude that there are anti-Israeli forces in Washington out to "get" Israel and to weaken the relationship between the two countries. Yes, there are some American officials who have no great love for Israel and are only too happy to damage it. But Israel also has to take a closer look at how it operates in the U.S. American officials who deal routinely with Israeli representatives complain of a certain arrogance.

Israeli leaders in Jerusalem cannot assume that Israel will continue to receive favoured treatment in the U.S. forever. All of these incidents can have a very damaging impact.

American officials, when suspicious of any Israeli wrongdoing from now on, are going to pursue the leads full speed ahead. It seems in Washington that Israel is going to have to be more cautious in its American operations than in the past – even if it means exercising a little less political clout or getting a little less intelligence information and military hardware. The alternative is worse. The bad publicity of the past few months could spiral and really poison ties between Washington and Jerusalem.

The end of a beautiful friendship

A few weeks ago Vice Premier Yitzhak Shamir was an ardent defender of outgoing Shin Bet chief Avraham Shalom. ARYE NAOR questions Shamir's latest comments on the GSS affair and argues for an inquiry.

THE LAST doubts over the appropriate measures to be taken in the General Security Service affair were finally removed this week by none other than Vice Premier Yitzhak Shamir himself. After his newspaper interview a few days ago there is no alternative to an inquiry – which is becoming more and more essential for the future of the rule of law, morality and democratic values in this country – at least on the grounds of the widening gap between the government and people of South Africa. In all those long years, whenever we needed it, we could count on unstinted help from South Africa. Who do we have to thank?

"And then, on the other hand, take the government and people of South Africa, in all those long years, whenever we needed it, we could count on unstinted help from South Africa. Who do we have to thank? Perhaps one should not be and genuinely applied them, would I agree that the time had come for Israel to take stock, and see if new circumstances had arisen. But I do not expect that in the foreseeable future," Landau concluded.

rious contribution to Israel's security.

The inner circle also talked about the difference between security and the law and said that security considerations should prevail. Shalom and his men were described as true patriots, who always acted in good faith.

LANDAU NOTES that the most stentorian voices demanding action turned into an empty shell, and that goods will continue to move both ways, despite an official ban.

Shemtov said: "I don't see sanctions as punishment. I see it as a potentially effective lever of world pressure to be applied at the right time and in the right place, selectively."

The former Mapam cabinet minister emphasized that Israel cannot afford, on moral grounds and on grounds of conscience, to lag behind in any campaign of economic sanctions.

"Israel must be out there, up front, not tailing along in the rear. The Jewish people, and its national symbol, the State of Israel, demonstrate the awesome price paid in our time, for the rampage of racism.

"When other nations refrained from battling racism in the past, and the Jews were the prime victims of racism, the other nations always

of Shamir to be the minister in

When I asked the left opposition MK whether he did not fear the possible damage to Israel-South Africa collaboration in the security sphere, about which so much has been written abroad, he said: "If the security collaboration you mention does in fact exist, which I do not affirm, my obligations as a former cabinet minister prevent me from comment or even speculation."

Shemtov stressed that he would on no account favour Israel severing diplomatic ties with South Africa. "I stand for the principle of universal diplomatic relations."

I pointed out that the reports of Israel-made weapons in South African hands could not be "talked away" by a turn of phrase, and he responded: "At every opportunity, I went on consistent public record, as how he referred to former attorney-general, Professor Yitzhak Zamir, and he then said: "Maybe I should have told him, 'Go to hell!' Maybe I should have fired him on the spot, when he started clinging like a leech."

Even one who supports Shamir's position cannot ignore the difference between this style and that of Menachem Begin's both in office as well as in private. Far from Begin's who had killed hundreds of blacks and detroyed much property. Because of this, moderates dared not speak up.

Du Buisson also said the leading black anti-apartheid group, the African National Congress (ANC), "works very closely" with the Palestine Liberation Organization. According to information provided by Israeli authorities, he said, ANC terrorists received training at PLO bases in Lebanon and Iraq.

Calls for action against Pretoria are from men of double standards

Uzi Landau

Israel cannot afford on moral grounds to stay aloof

Victor Shemtov (Andre Brutmann)

UZI LANDAU, of the Likud's Herut wing, is totally opposed to economic sanctions by Israel against South Africa.

"It is not that I support apartheid. On the contrary, I am entirely against it. But the considerations which Israel has to take into account, in its foreign relations, far outweigh the arguments in support of economic sanctions," the first-term MK told The Jerusalem Post.

"The European politicians who are advocating economic sanctions against South Africa claim to speak in the name of justice," the engineer-parliamentarian said. "But let's not forget that the nations of Europe talk a lot about justice, yet do nothing to make it a reality.

"Europe has a history of imposing sanctions against Israel, for instance. Take France. The French turned against us in 1967, and left us in the lurch in our time of danger. Britain imposed an arms embargo on Israel more than once. Norway imposed an oil embargo on Israel. The European Community not so long ago drafted a political policy hostile to Israel and in favour of the PLO, in its Venice Declaration.

"How many enlightened democracies around the world either collaborate actively with the Arab economic boycott against Israel, or at least refrain from foiling it?

"During the Yom Kippur war, when the enemy was at our gates, what did the nations of Europe care about justice? They did everything in their power to hamper American efforts to come to our aid when we most needed it. There is not a single nation in Europe which can approach Israel with a clear conscience and expect us to join them in economic sanctions against South Africa," he said. "Nothing could be further from the minds and hearts of the Europeans than justice.

"And then, on the other hand, take the government and people of South Africa. In all those long years, whenever we needed it, we could count on unstinted help from South Africa. Who do we have to thank? South Africa or Europe?"

Landau added: "Our fundamental principle should be to show gratitude where gratitude is due."

JUST AS Israel should reject a call from other nations to join in economic sanctions, it should likewise turn down calls from some of its domestic politicians to initiate sanctions off its own bat, or head an international campaign to that end.

"Take a look at the sort of Israeli who wants to pressure South Africa in the name of justice. They are the same well-defined circles who constantly call for ties with the Soviet Union. Yet the Soviet Union is a far more evil and totalitarian state than South Africa.

"By that I don't mean to gloss over the fact that South African society has some ugly facets, which result from a situation in which some of the people are first-class citizens and others are second-class citizens.

"But in the Soviet Union, the government harasses and oppresses many sections of its constituent populations, not only the Jews.

"Those who call for economic sanctions against South Africa, foreigners as well as Israelis, are men of double standards. Justice cannot be applied selectively. It has to be universal when advocated in this manner. What they care about is politics, not justice," Landau said.

The Likud MK said there could be nothing wrong in making profits in business deals with South Africa. "Israel's balance of payments is a vital issue. We should sell to the Soviet Union if we can, not just to South Africa."

He simply does not believe that the European states which today call for sanctions and tomorrow might vote for them, will be sincere about applying them. He is convinced that the sanctions will be evaded and turned into an empty shell, and that goods will continue to move both ways, despite an official ban.

LANDAU NOTES that the most stentorian voices demanding action against Pretoria are to be found in black African and Moslem lands, which also happen to have intimate trade ties with South Africa.

"When it comes to racism and discrimination, the Arab lands are no better than South Africa. Yet we still call for diplomatic ties with the Arabs – and trade relations as well."

Landau recalls that Israel, flying the flag of justice, refused to have diplomatic ties with Franco's Spain during the 1950s. Later, when Israel decided it was ready to set up those ties, Spain refused, and Israel had to wait many years till Spain agreed to forgive and forget the original rebuff. He would not want Israel to make a comparable error again.

"Let us remember, too, that we have to consider the interests of South African Jews, and we have to do all in our power to protect those interests. As long as our diplomatic and economic ties are at their present level, their situation presents no worry. If the interests of other South Africans suffer because of economic sanctions, the interests of the Jews will suffer too."

Landau declined to add anything on this aspect of the problem, despite my repeated questions.

For him, the bottom line of the issue is very simple. "The subversion in South Africa is all directed and financed by Moscow. The fight against apartheid is part of the Russian plan to take over the continent. Any black regime which would in theory follow the white regime in Pretoria would be pro-Soviet.

"Economic sanctions will not ease the social plight of the blacks in South Africa. If sanctions are effective, the white regime could collapse, leaving the economy in chaos and making the Blacks suffer more than the Whites.

"Only if I were to be convinced that the U.S. voted for sanctions and genuinely applied them, would I agree that the time had come for Israel to take stock, and see if new circumstances had arisen. But I do not expect that in the foreseeable future," Landau concluded.

Knesset Correspondent Asher Wallfish gets the view of two MKs

VETERAN Mapam MK Victor Shemtov is convinced that sooner or later the apartheid regime in South Africa must fall.

"My belief is based on historical grounds," he told The Post. "And I also view the fate of South African Jewry in a historical perspective, because there, just as in other places at other times, they are caught between two fires.

"Many white extremists tend to lump the Jews into one basket as black-lovers. Many black extremists tend to lump the Jews into one basket as collaborators with their white oppressors.

"In pre-1939 Europe, the Nazis labelled Jews as Communists. But the Communists labelled the Jews as front-runners of international capitalism. In Europe then, and in South Africa today, the Jews are in a no-win situation," Shemtov said.

"Israel must join other countries in imposing effective economic sanctions against the South African regime," he said. "By sanctions, I do not mean boycott. The blacks would be hurt in a boycott, and I would not like to see any black South African go hungry because of international measures. The aim of the economic sanctions must be to show the Pretoria government, without any shadow of doubt, that the world finds its apartheid policies insufferable. The sanctions must put the apartheid regime beyond the pale."

Shemtov said: "I don't see sanctions as punishment. I see it as a potentially effective lever of world pressure to be applied at the right time and in the right place, selectively."

The former Mapam cabinet minister emphasized that Israel cannot afford, on moral grounds and on grounds of conscience, to lag behind in any campaign of economic sanctions.

"Israel must be out there, up front, not tailing along in the rear. The Jewish people, and its national symbol, the State of Israel, demonstrate the awesome price paid in our time, for the rampage of racism.

"When other nations refrained from battling racism in the past, and the Jews were the prime victims of racism, the other nations always used to advance utilitarian excuses for their inaction, and point to the material losses they would sustain if they followed the dictate of conscience.

"There are nations today which, in their heart of hearts, respond passively or negatively to the idea of economic sanctions against South Africa, because they fear they will lose financially.

"Israel must be ready to lose financially by economic sanctions against South Africa. But Israel cannot say, like Britain said before 1939, when it feared losing money by penalizing Hitler, that profits are more important than conscience."

Shemtov said Israel could take the lead on the sanctions issue by the government and the Knesset turning formally to the democratic nations and appealing for united action.

He does not believe that the South African government would punish or harass the Jewish community if the Israel government imposed economic sanctions.

"Remember also that the Jews of South Africa will not suffer any more harm as the result of Israeli measures, than they are causing themselves anyway, by hanging on in that country. We know that many South African Jews are resolutely opposed to apartheid. Nor can we justify to ourselves first and foremost, and to the democratic world in the second place, that we would be right in refraining from sanctions on the grounds that we might possibly harm our fellow Jews living there."

SHEMTOV recalled that past governments in Israel, led by Labour and the Likud alike, had come out very strongly against apartheid in public forums and that hence measures such as sanctions would not take Pretoria by surprise.

When I asked the left opposition MK whether he did not fear the possible damage to Israel-South Africa collaboration in the security sphere, about which so much has been written abroad, he said: "If the security collaboration you mention does in fact exist, which I do not affirm, my obligations as a former cabinet minister prevent me from comment or even speculation."

Shemtov stressed that he would on no account favour Israel severing diplomatic ties with South Africa. "I stand for the principle of universal diplomatic relations."

I pointed out that the reports of Israel-made weapons in South African hands could not be "talked away" by a turn of phrase, and he responded: "At every opportunity, I went on consistent public record, as opposing the sale of arms to South Africa."

Conceding that many Israelis would object to economic sanctions, Shemtov said: "Their only reasons are financial reasons. But to say you cannot fight oppression because it costs you money is an outrage."

He said he would present a motion in the Knesset plenum shortly, calling on the government and the Knesset to submit a position paper to the European Community in advance of the Brussels conference on South Africa in October, in which Israel would commit itself to cooperation in the sphere of economic sanctions.

SHEMTOV has not been a kibitzer in this country's national politics scene. After serving for six months as a Minister-without-Portfolio in 1970, he served for two periods as Health Minister, under the late Golda Meir in 1970-74 and under Yitzhak Rabin 1974-77.

'We must be ready to lose financially ... profits can never be more important than conscience'

Africa is by no means a totally strange continent to him. He made official visits to discuss health and international cooperation, to Cameroon, Senegal and the Ivory Coast, while a minister.

"African leaders whom I got to know told me they see Israel as a loyal and trusted ally, in the struggle to get equal rights in South Africa for the blacks."

Shemtov said he would not refuse to visit South Africa to meet with the Jewish community, even today, but he would not go for any other purpose, while apartheid prevails.

"There is no Jewish community outside the Communist bloc or the Arab lands today, which urgently needs a Zionist solution to its plight, more than the Jews of South Africa," Shemtov said.

Labouring under no illusions

Not surprisingly Haim Haberfeld has some sharp words for the government and employers, but the Histadrut trade union chief also finds room for reform in the labour branch. Mark Segal reports

IT WAS not quite the right day for a lengthy interview with Haim Haberfeld, chief of the Histadrut Trade Union department. The nurses' strike was coming to a boil, and he had just been in a packed lift that plummeted suddenly. It took a few minutes until the excitement among his staff over the incident subsided, with lots of jokes about it having happened "accidentally on purpose."

I had an opportunity to look round his office, at the pictures of planes and tanks presented to him during his 12 years as head of the IDF civilian employees union (1970-83). Among the usual plaques from foreign trade-union delegations were gleaming sporting trophies, mementoes of his years as chairman of the Israeli Football Association. They symbolize his philosophy that there is life beyond work and politics, not the usual approach found in this particular post.

We had hardly settled down to talk when Histadrut Secretary-General Yisrael Kessar strode into the room, trailed by Nurses Union secretary Keremia Padan. I left them thrashing out the nitty-gritty of the strike-ending formula, which Haberfeld later took up to the hospital nurses waiting in the seventh-floor conference hall. That was not to be the end of it, as I found hours later, waiting to resume my interrupted interview, delayed again as Kessar once more came down from his fifth-floor office to discuss changes in the formula.

I was told that it is usually Haberfeld who goes up to Kessar's office. This indicated both the pressing nature of the business at hand, and the kind of close working relationship between the solitary Histadrut chief and the tough man he picked to take over from him at the Trade Union Department in 1984.

TOGETHER they make a formidable team, and deserve their share of the credit for having made the government's economic programme work. If the curbing of inflation deserves the name of Israel's economic miracle, then Haberfeld is entitled to be acknowledged as one of the wonder-workers. He does not like being termed the epitome of responsible trade unionism, preferring to see himself as a realist, cognizant of the limitations of the power of organized labour.

Haberfeld has an unflappable temperament. Like so many of his predecessors, he is capable of wearing out others at the negotiating table in night-long sessions. His loyal assistant, Danny Amshalem, says his boss can pack another man's three working days into one.

When I mention that comment, Haberfeld snorts: "Don't lets exaggerate. Lets say two, not three, working days in one.

He admits that he usually works a 16-hour day. From his staff I learned of his capacity for evoking deep devotion and long working hours from others.

Haberfeld confesses to making do with four to five hour sleep, which enabled him to run Israeli football for years after clearing away the week's trade union problems. This capacity for coping on little sleep served him well as a late-night TV viewer of Mundial broadcasts.

Haberfeld also seems graced with the rare talent of not making enemies, whether in the trade union organization, the Labour Party or sports politics. In labour relations he has served as Kessar's lightning rod, deflecting wrath in dealing with restless trade unionists bearing the brunt of counter-inflationary measures. One apparent reason why Kessar chose him was that neither man belongs to any party or trade union clique. Moreover, Haberfeld has no known political ambitions, which must be very reassuring for someone like Kessar.

The only way I could finally get my interview was to travel with the trade union chief to Jerusalem. As the scenery flashed past the car window, I asked him whether it was easy to work in harness with Kessar. "It's easy for me," said Haberfeld. "We complement each other. He's the sharpest mind I know."

HAIM HABERFELD was brought here in 1933 at the age of two from Slovakia: "My family had the sense to get out in time. Half of them came here, the rest went to Australia." On of his cousins is Davar editor Hanna Zemer. The family first settled in Tel Aviv, then moved to Rishon Letzion. After his father volunteered for the British Army, young Haim was sent to the Ben-Shemen youth village, missing Shimon and Sonya Peres by a few years.

He stayed there from 1941 to 1944, and regards those as the most formative of his life, with pedagogues like Arye Simon and author Yizhar Smilansky, who was his literature teacher. "I can say with certainty that Ben-Shemen formed our characters. We were taught true values and the love of Eretz Israel, and to devote our lives to the Zionist cause."

A devoted member of the school basketball squad, Haberfeld had a best friend named Michael Strauss, who used to take him to stay at his family home in the Abu Tor quarter of Jerusalem, where he met Michael's awesome grandfather, Martin Bubef. "I suppose I didn't really appreciate who he was. But I can still remember how impressed by mother was at meeting the famous sage through her son," Haberfeld recalled.

After high school, Haberfeld began to play football on the Rishon Lezion Hapoel youth team and was a messenger for the local Haganah unit. The War of Independence brought him and his pals to join the army before their 17th birthday.

After demobilizing, Haberfeld stayed on as a civilian employee. His leadership qualities brought him to the works committee and to the national executive of the IDF civilian employees union, which picked him as its chairman in 1970. That full-time job brought him to Histadrut head offices, the first rung up the trade union organizational ladder.

In parallel fashion he had risen through the hierarchy of sports politics, first as head of the defunct Rishon Lezion Hapoel football club, then in various Hapoel national bodies, and finally to chairmanship of the Football Association. He was obliged to give it up after assuming his present duties.

He has educated himself in the complexities of economic theories and is well-equipped intellectually to cope with the high-powered experts brought along by the government and the employers to all negotiations.

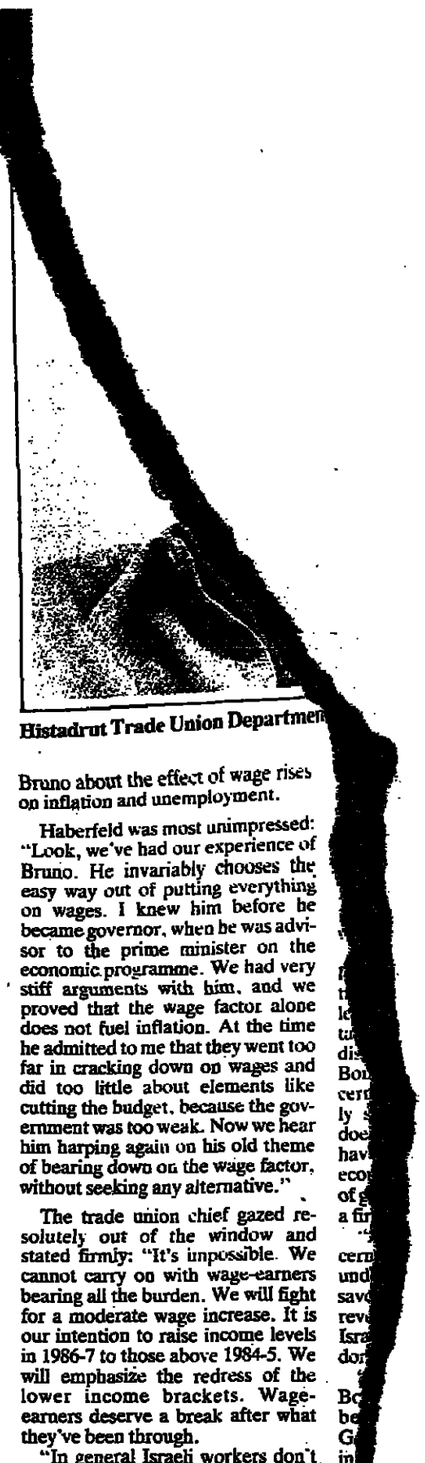

HABERFELD is outspoken in his ambition to shake-up the Israeli trade-union structure and the wage system: "We're about to set up a study group to evolve a reform programme. The present system is outdated. The unions have not kept up with dramatic changes in labour relations and occupational developments. We have to reassess the relationship between national trade unions and the department, so as to afford them a broader margin of operation.

"I keep telling my comrades, if we don't change, then the strong currents from below will sweep us away. The same applies to the public sector pay structure, which has not been properly looked at for 22 years. All that's been done was to add patches on top of patches, year after year. Well, it's not good enough anymore."

Did he include the nurses in the above criticism? "We failed to provide the right responses at the correct time. The Nurses Union sought to escape reality. The result was that the situation got out of hand."

He dwelt on the difficulty of dealing with the hospital nurses, who lack any clearly-recognized leadership, and were thus inclined to give in to the extreme and unrealistic elements among their numbers.

I mentioned the dire warning of Bank of Israel Governor Michael Bruno about the effect of wage rises on inflation and unemployment.

Histadrut Trade Union Department

Haberfeld was most unimpressed: "Look, we've had our experience of Bruno. He invariably chooses the easy way out of putting everything on wages. I knew him before he became governor, when he was advisor to the prime minister on the economic programme. We had very stiff arguments with him, and we proved that the wage factor alone does not fuel inflation. At the time he admitted to me that they went too far in cracking down on wages and did too little about elements like cutting the budget, because the government was too weak. Now we hear him harping again on his old theme of bearing down on the wage factor, without seeking any alternative."

The trade union chief gazed resolutely out of the window and stated firmly: "It's unpossible. We cannot carry on with wage-earners bearing all the burden. We will fight for a moderate wage increase. It is our intention to raise income levels in 1986-7 to those above 1984-5. We will emphasize the redress of the lower income brackets. Wage-earners deserve a break after what they've been through.

Wall-to-wall waffle

PUBLIC FACES / Mark Segal

AS THE government crashes from one affair to the next, ministers showed real national unity when it came to deciding not to decide on Bank of Israel Governor Michael Bruno's urging them to sack Discount Bank head Raphael Recanati.

Professed social democrats, liberals and Revisionists all acknowledge the unifying offered by George Orwell in Animal Farm: "All men are equal, but some are more equal." They are making a mockery of Justice Moshe Bejski and his commission, and suckers out of the other top culprits of the bank share scandal – ex-bank chiefs Ernest Japhet (Leumi), Giora Gazit (Hapoalim), and Aharon Meir (United Mizrachi). This scandal impressed the cabinet majority as much as the collapse of the nation's hospital system. Apparently Prime Minister Shimon Peres, Vice-Premier Yitzhak Shamir and Defence Minister Yitzhak Rabin subscribe, with the Liberal trio of Justice Minister Yitzhak Moda'i, Tourism Minister Avraham Sharir and (absentee) Science Minister Gideon Patt, and not forgetting populist Social Affairs Minister Moshe Katsav, to F. Scott Fitzgerald's remark to Ernest Hemingway: "The rich are different from us."

IT'S NO WONDER that Labour MK Haim Ramon of the Knesset Finance Committee questions whether the cabinet has become a branch of Discount Bank. His veteran party comrade, ex-justice minister Haim Zadok, has not unexpectedly quite opposite views. He did not run to the media over the cabinet decision on Recanati with cries of "a black day for the rule of law," as he did a week earlier over the General Security Service affair. Of course, no one imagines for a moment that the degree of Zadok's moral outrage on public issues is ever influenced by his business interests. Of course, his stand on the Recanati issue is unblemished by the fact that he heads the law office representing the Discount Bank.

THEY SAY Shamir has so benefitted inside Herut from the attacks on him over the GSS affair that should Herut's convention be reconvened next week, he would be carried in triumph through the hall on the shoulders of Gaston Malka (who led the disruption of the first session).

Haim Zadok (Aliza Auerbach)

Menachem Begin (Zoom 77)

Gary Hart (Andre Brutmann)

IT'LL BE interesting to see how far the incipient Labour Party rebellion against Peres over the GSS affair inquiry will go. Knesset Defence and Foreign Affairs Committee chairman Abba Eban believes Peres will finally accept the view of the majority. "Statesmanship is also cooperating with the inevitable," says Eban.

We met at World Wizo president Raya Juglom's farewell party for French Ambassador Jacques Dupont and his wife Marie-Paule at the Tel Aviv Hilton Hotel, when she presented him with an antique vase (1200 BCE) and thanked him for his friendship for Wizo here, and for refuseniks during his five years at France's Moscow embassy (1973-78). Justice Minister Moda'i was there with wife Michal, World Wizo chairman, whom I heard promising Sonya Abramowitch some Wizo volunteers for the strike-bound Hakirya maternity hospital, of which she is patron.

Minister-without-Portfolio Moshe Arens was his usual affable self, while Tourism Minister Sharir looked relaxed amazingly showed no sign of jet lag. It's said he has spent one-quarter of his ministerial term abroad (145 days). Soon off to London, Sharir should be named Minister for Foreign Tourism.

THE FOREIGN MINISTRY staff committee, led by Moshe Pe'er, is protesting against the over-politicization of our foreign service. It complained, "Dozens of diplomats' families are obliged to sit on their suitcases for months, not knowing what awaits them, including where to register their children for next year's schooling." Meanwhile Shamir plans to post Netanya (Herut) deputy mayor Yitzhak Ben-Gad to Boston as our consul-general. At least he speaks English properly, which is more than can be said of Udi Cohen, whom Industry and Trade Minister Ariel Sharon sent as Israel's commercial attaché to Milan. His main qualification is being the son of Deputy Knesset Speaker Meir Cohen-Avidov, a key Sharon faction figure in Herut.

IT WASN'T just the series of partisan appointments that brought the usually even-tempered ministry staff committee chairman, Pinhas Sagiv, to the boiling point. Rather it's that Arik apparently thinks that anything less than adulation from subordinates implies rebelliousness. The upper floor of the two-storey ministry building in the Tel Aviv Kirya has been unofficially renamed Metsudat Arik since his aides, like Yisrael Katz, took it over.

I'M TOLD that Avraham (Abrasha) Tamir, director-general of the Prime Minister's Office and Peres's National Security Adviser, is optimistic about a speedy resolution of the Taba dispute. Otherwise (I'm told) he wouldn't be taking up a long-standing invitation of the National Security Council in Washington D.C. He is no stranger in that town, having been a research fellow at the Rand Institute think tank.

PERES'S media counsellor Uri Savir (on loan from the Foreign Ministry) has been deluged with congratulatory phone calls, letters and telegrams, after the Foreign Ministry announced the appointment of his namesake, diplomat Uri Savir to the Copenhagen embassy.

PREMIER Peres came down to Tel Aviv to receive the 1986 Dale Carnegie International Award for outstanding leadership from Carnegie International's Richard Morgal, who stood in for Lee Iacocca, and its local chief, Dalia Eylon Levy. Some 1,500 of the 10,000 Israeli graduates who've learned "How to Win Friends and Influence People" in the past 13 years, heard Peres knowingly say "Every organization has people specializing in making big quarrels out of small ones."

DEMOCRATIC presidential hopeful Senator Gary Hart (Dem.-Colorado) finally made it to Israel on his fourth try. Heeding his request to meet "Israel's promising younger leadership," U.S. Ambassador Thomas Pickering hosted a dinner at the Tel Aviv Hilton attended by Herutniks Deputy Foreign Minister Ronnie Milo, Shamir aide Tsachi Hanegbi, Yavne Mayor MK Meir Shitrit and MK Ehud Olmert (all from the Shamir faction), with only Government Press Office chief Israel (Rollie) Peleg appearing for Labour. By unfortunate coincidence the other young Labour people invited, Government Secretary Yossi Beilin, MK Haim Ramon and Peres's political adviser Nimrod Novik had prior commitments. I gather that during his visit here Hart has been his usual non-committal self. However, in a Ha'aretz interview last weekend he said: "I'm not ready to state explicitly where we should bend Israel's arm."

EX-PREMIER Menachem Begin's decision to bomb the Baghdad nuclear reactor was almost foiled by then defence minister Ezer Weizman, but his resignation in 1980 allowed Begin to proceed with the plan in 1981, so Begin's former spokesman (1978-80) Yediot Aharonot columnist Shlomo Nakdimon reveals in his forthcoming book on the raid. The plan was also initially opposed by the then deputy premier, the late Yigael Yadin, and by both then Mossad chief Yitzhak Hofi and then IDF intelligence chief Yehoshua Saguy. Nakdimon reports how the idea ripened as soon as Begin took office in 1977. Negotiations have begun with U.S. publishers, he says.

PLANNING to be in Washington D.C. to "welcome" Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev is Natan Shcharansky, depending on the state of his wife Avital's pregnancy, so he said when meeting American Jewish leaders at the Jerusalem home of UJA Israel office director Naftali Lavie.

PRINCE ANDREW may wish to purge mention of Zion from his wedding psalms, but his bride-to-be Sarah Ferguson will be hard put to erase her Israeli connection. It appears that "Fergie's" last pre-wedding job has been working on the proofs of the first joint publishing effort of London publisher Richard Burton and the Israel Museum, the English-Hebrew text of 100 works on Paper of Israeli artists, by Meira Perry-Lehman, the museum's curator of prints and drawings. The future Duchess of York will by now have learned all about such past Israeli artists as Pinhas Litvinovsky, Leopold Krakauer, Anna Ticho, Yitzhak Danziger, and living ones like Moshe Kupferman and Aviva Uri. Paris-based Avigdor Arikha is already known to her future in-laws; he was commissioned to paint the portrait of the Queen Mother.

You probably know the story about the poor man who meets the rich man at the school reunion and asks him how to succeed in business. Says the rich man: "The first ten years, you've got to be a bastard."

"And after that?"

"After that, you stay a bastard."

Perhaps government is just a business like any other. And then, perhaps, it is not.

I don't know the name of the head of the Swiss confederation. Not that it slipped my memory: I never heard of him – or her. Perhaps you can help me out? No? Ask a few Swiss: You will be surprised how many are just as ignorant as you and I. Could there be a lesson in this?

You see in Switzerland, government isn't the function of an ideal, a doctrine or any other holy cow. It is just a responsible job that has to be done. No glamour, no supertension. When it comes to holy cows, such as the question "Are women human enough to vote?", they inconvenience everybody with a plebiscite.

PLEASE DON'T jump to conclusions: though the Swiss have the most anonymous, the least active and therefore the best government in the world, and also the highest income, they lead terrible private lives. They worry. Every other Swiss visits a psychiatrist, making him crazy. The psychiatrist sees another psychiatrist, and so on. What do they have to worry about? The children. The dog. The chalet. The car. The anyw the job.

But apart from w
tingencies, what conclusions a

trations of the well-governed Sw and from the good life and politi

Perhaps, if we didn't know how badly we are governed, we could the better enjoy our private follies, so a media black-out would solve our problem. And we might loan Sharon and Shamir and Peres to the Swiss, so they could start worrying about the government and forget the psychiatrist.

On the other hand, it may not work out. Our personal well-being is so very dependent on our way of looking at it.

The other day I met an old friend, a farmer, coming out of Kupat Holim. I asked him how he was doing.

"Wonderful. My heart condition is now stable, so if I take my pills I can go on working. Tell me, Teddy, what do I do to lay my car up for three months?"

I told him. Then, as an afterthought, I asked:

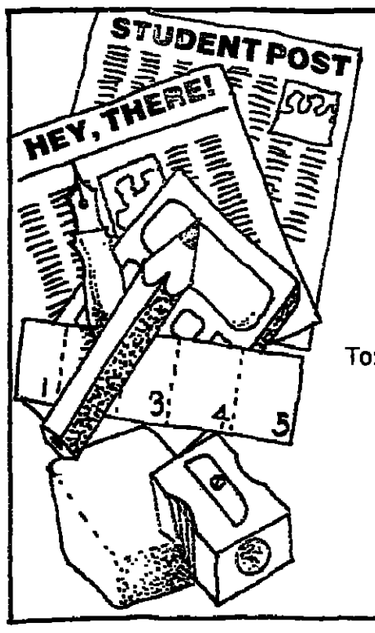

"Why on earth do you want to lay it up? Going abroad?"

"Oh no. I don't have the money for the insurance just now. But I hope to get it in October."

He was positively beaming.

Can you guess why I dislike great men? I suspect that the world would be better off without them.

I like the little blokes. Like my farmer friend.

ANALYSIS/Benny Morris

Egypt policymakers divided over Taba

There are three differing viewpoints in Egypt at present concerning the ongoing Taba negotiations and the arbitration to which they are supposed to lead.

The first viewpoint, with which various Moslem fundamentalist leaders and law professors are identified, regards Taba as a piece of "holy" Egyptian territory. No foreigner should be in a position to determine who is sovereign over it. Egypt, therefore, ought to back away from the arbitration process altogether.

The second viewpoint, expressed by hardline officials such as President Mubarak's top adviser Osama al-Baz, also calls for Egypt to backtrack from arbitration, but for practical "political" reasons. The adherents of this viewpoint regret the initial Egyptian insistence on arbitration, and now fear that, as Israel has a relatively good case, the process may end with Israeli retention of all or part of the disputed territory.

At first, the Egyptians thought Israel had no case for sovereignty over Taba. Now these officials fear that the loss of all or part of Taba through arbitration may be viewed as a "failure" for which they will have to pay a "personal" price – dismissal or resignation.

The third viewpoint, embraced by Egyptian Foreign Minister Esmat Abdel Meguid, believes that now Egypt has committed itself to arbitration, it cannot renege or withdraw from the process (the U.S. would not look favourably upon such a withdrawal, it would badly affect Egyptian-Israeli relations, etc.). Egypt, it is felt, must try to hammer out as favourable a compromis (the document outlining the terms of reference of the arbitrators) as possible, in order to minimize the risks in the arbitration.

This view, Israeli policy-makers believe, is "dominant" in Egyptian policy and is supported by Mubarak. It underlies Egypt's recent footdragging in the negotiations, which are marked by struggles over every comma and phrase.

Israeli policy-makers hope that the compromis will be signed and sealed in the coming weeks, but a few points still remain at issue.

The major sticking point is the content of the "annex" to the "question" in the document. The "question" is what the arbitrators will be empowered, and asked, to answer in determining sovereignty over Taba and the dozen or so other disputed border tracts. The annex is supposed to set out the two countries' positions with respect to the dispute.

Israel's position is that the Egyptian-Israeli border should be determined by the 1906 British demarcation. Egypt's position is that the border should run along the 1967 line.

Israel is agreeable to both sides' positions being set out in the annex. But Egypt is unhappy about allowing Israel to state its case fully and explicitly in the annex.

U.S. mediator Abraham Sofaer, the State Department legal adviser, this week submitted to Israel and Egypt a "package" of proposals dealing with "technical issues" designed to bridge the impasse over the annex. Sofaer suggests that a joint team of geographers and experts be sent to the Taba area to determine the positioning of the old border markers, and to work out how these compare with the demarcation lines set out by the British team in 1906.

Peres on Taba

Prime Minister Shimon Peres, speaking at the closing dinner at the Knesset of the Yeshiva University Centennial Leadership visit in Israel last night said: "It looks like we may be near a breakthrough on Taba."

Israel has responded positively to Sofaer's proposals and is now awaiting Egypt's response.

Because Egypt has made the Taba dispute such a cardinal issue of its foreign policy, it now finds it difficult to speed through any decision. Every step must be debated and resolved before definitive responses are reached, and everyone is afraid to take responsibility, fearing that they might have to pay a price for the possible ultimate failure of arbitration. Egypt is now paying the price for its early "magnification" of the Taba issue, Israeli policy-makers feel.

Failure – the loss of all or part of Taba – would be embarrassing for the Mubarak regime vis-à-vis its opposition at home, and problematic for Egypt in the general Arab arena.

Still, Israeli policy-makers believe that agreement will be reached in the coming weeks, triggering a whole range of already agreed "normalization" steps between the two countries, including a return of the Egyptian ambassador to Tel Aviv and a possible summit meeting between Mubarak and Prime Minister Peres.

Moslems say Jerusalem cemetery desecrated

By JOEL GREENBERG

The head of the Supreme Moslem Council in Jerusalem charged yesterday that municipal construction work in Independence Park was desecrating a Moslem cemetery at the site.

Sheikh Saad A-Din Al-Alami told a press conference that bulldozers had uncovered human bones and gravesites at the cemetery, in which he said thousands of Moslems, including disciples of the prophet Mohammed and commanders of Moslem armies, were buried.

Al-Alami distributed the text of a telegram he had sent to Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek demanding a halt to the excavation, which is being carried out in preparation for construction of an underground parking lot. He said the work had been halted five months ago when he made a similar complaint.

Kollek's adviser on Arab affairs, Amir Heshin, ridiculed Al-Alami's charges and called them "lies." He said the site being excavated was not part of the cemetery.

Heads of the Wakf (Moslem religious property trust) shows human bones allegedly removed from a Moslem cemetery in Jerusalem's Independence Park, at a press conference yesterday. (Rahamim Israeli)

Other bank heads resigned, accepting the recommendations of the Bejski Commission, but Discount Bank chairman Raphael Recanati refuses. 'To fire the chairman means firing the family which has run the bank for half-a-century,' says Recanati in an interview with The Jerusalem Post's DAVID KRIVINE.

'We're not trying to dodge anything,' says Recanati

WHEN RAPHAEL RECANATI, chairman and managing-director of the Israel Discount Bank (IDB) refuses, with the unanimous backing of his board of directors, to resign, he gives expression to a sense of injury felt by Israel's banking community.

The "regulation" of share prices was a bad mistake, nobody denies that. But to quote Recanati, not only the banks did it, "all Israel was engaged in some form of market regulation."

Everybody knew about the "regulation" by the banks and many people in authority were involved. The Knesset Finance Committee exempted from the Peace-for-Galilee war tax those share purchases made to regulate the market.

In March 1983 (after the collapse of general share prices on the stock exchange), then Finance Minister Yoram Aridor authorized the banks to raise their already over-priced shares further, this time by 0.5 per cent a month above index.

Says Recanati: "If the Treasury or the Bank of Israel had decided we were doing something wrong they should have told us. They could have sent a message telling us to stop regulating share prices. We never received such a request."

IDB's chief operating officer Eli Cohen, adds: "Through the years our intervention was designed to maintain an orderly market. It was in those fateful months of 1983 that things got out of hand."

The Bejski commission says that of $1.3b. of shares sold, the banks bought back $920m., or 70 per cent. What kind of expansion is that?

Recanati: "The value of all the bank shares that had to be protected was over $6b. The $920m. of purchases must be related to that total."

Why the sudden spurt of bank-share purchases in April-October 1983?

Recanati: "Because the buying-power of the shekel had dropped by 30 per cent in terms of the dollar and the government failed to devaluate – except by a paltry 7.5 per cent in July.

"So there was mass dumping of shekel securities and a flight to the dollar. We were fighting to keep our share values from plunging." (The necessary big devaluation of 23 per cent came in October, after the damage had been done.)

That was the trouble, bankers say: the whole system was wrong. It was wrong of the government to sell-gilt-edged index-linked bonds in unlimited quantities, hogging the capital market.

It was wrong of the government to "print" huge sums of money and thus generate three-figure inflation. This allowed the tax authorities, intentionally or not, to scalp the banks. In 1979 and 1980 the banks paid more than 100 per cent of their profits in tax which, as Professor Haim Ben-Shahar stated when testifying on their behalf before the commission did not exactly facilitate the sale of their shares.

Did they have to sell shares? They thought they had to because they were required to expand, particularly abroad. To quote Ben-Shahar again, the volume of their business rose at a hair-raising pace from 16 per cent of the gross national product to 173 per cent in one decade (1972-83).

During that period Israel was short of foreign currency because of the Yom Kippur War and the explosion of petrol prices that followed. The banks rallied round, mobilizing $12b. of dollar deposits in Israel and in their branches overseas.

To achieve all that they had to maintain share prices which were competitive and would permit an expansion of their equity when necessary.

All right, say the critics, but that was not the way to do it. Now you tell us, the banks reply. Why did nobody speak up at the time?

Raphael Recanati: The taxpayer does not have to be involved. (Ippa)

IDB's Eli Cohen: The Bejski recommendations are not the verdict of a court. (Harari)

The "regulation" procedure was not a secret: it was mentioned in prospectuses for share issues. There were arguments about it. Some (the banks) were for, others (the supervisory authorities) were against – but nobody made it an issue of principle. Nobody said it must be abandoned or we resign.

The Bejski commission points out indignantly that the banks were in breach of the law. All the same nobody filed a suit against them. Moreover it is illegal, says the commission, to reduce own capital except with the approval of a court. Buying back own shares means reducing own capital, so the banks used daughter companies to do the buying.

That sounds unprincipled. Yet the banks were known to be buying back their own shares. It had been going on for a long time. If it was wrong, why was it not stopped? What were the lawyers up to? Where was the Attorney-General?

THE BANKS are accused of serious errors, but are entitled to state their case. There are sometimes issues of policy, they point out, over which the authorities should take collective responsibility. Instead, a commission of inquiry is appointed and seeks to pinpoint the blame.

The bankers are not denying their share of responsibility. We got it wrong, they admit, but so did everybody else.

Israel had moved with breathtaking rapidity from being a small economy where everything was fixed in backrooms to a big open-market economy where nobody is supposed to fix anything. But the old habit of fixing overlapped, into the new age.

A crisis ensued and somebody has to take the blame. To force the resignation of six bank directors and only them is to make them – as they see it – the fall-guys; and that causes bitter feelings in the banking fraternity.

The Treasury prevented a complete collapse after the fall of the bank shares in October 1983 by underwriting their value. The taxpayer will be saddled at redemption time in 1988 with a monstrous financial burden. Are the banks not responsible for that?

In Recanati's view the taxpayer does not have to be involved. The shares of IDB could be worth their Treasury-guaranteed price of 1988 if only the banks are allowed to operate under normal competitive conditions, without – again – the intervention and controls of the backroom boys.

"IDB earned $22.5m. last year or 4.5 per cent of our capital. That is a low profit ratio and it is kept that way by the authorities who minimize all our earnings. On every fee, on every bank charge, on every compulsory deposit made under the liquidity regulations we have to do battle.

"American banks make 10-14 per cent on their capital. If we were allowed to compete freely as they do and achieve their level of return, our profit would be $50m.-70m. a year. That would raise the value of our shares close to the price guaranteed by the Treasury ($1.1b.)."

Other bank directors have resigned, why not Recanati?

Says IDB's Eli Cohen: "Because their boards of directors agreed that they should go, whereas ours did not. Mr. Recanati retains their trust and they want him to stay in office."

What about the conclusions of the Bejski commission?

"They are the recommendations of a committee, not the verdict of a court. The other banks are public institutions, and perhaps they can spare their directors. Behind Bank Leumi stands the World Zionist Organization, behind Bank Hapoalim the Histadrut, and behind Bank Mizrahi is the religious establishment.

"Behind the Discount Bank stands the Recanati family. IDB is a public shareholding concern, but privately managed. To fire the chairman means to fire the Recanati family, which has run the bank for half-a-century.

"The commission has other recommendations: that the Governor of the Bank of Israel be empowered to appoint or dismiss the managing-director, to add members to the board and to choose the auditors.

"These recommendations deprive the shareholders of ownership rights. The government would be part-nationalizing a private property."

Given that the board of IDB refuses to comply with the government's wishes, what happens next?

Recanati: "The cabinet has been asked to authorize my dismissal under the provisions of the banking ordinance. The ordinance permits a change of manager if the bank is in trouble. Our bank is not in trouble; it has deposits of $11b., half of that in foreign currency. Its situation is stable. There is no legal ground for my dismissal on that score.

"The other alternative is the Knesset State Control Committee's recommendation that a law be enacted enforcing my dismissal."

That would mean creating a punishment which did not exist when Recanati's offence was allegedly committed. His punishment would apply retroactively – something Israel has always tried to avoid doing.

"If this bank has done anything wrong," says Recanati, "there are courts to deal with the case. The courts have a known procedure. Each side is represented by advocates, each side has the right to appeal."

In fact the commission states that the banks may have broken the law in several respects – lending money to borrowers to buy the bank's own shares, advising client to acquire bank shares although that could be seen as a speculative investment, failing to make full and detailed, disclosure of the banks' share-regulating activities. There are other accusations, of falsifying accounts, of disguised transactions etc. Might there be a case for the bank directors to answer?

"Maybe but in a court of law. We are not dodging any obligations, and only want to protect our rights. We look to the country's legal system for justice, and would accept without question the verdict of the judiciary.

"We do not have to abide by the recommendations of any inquiry commission, however much we may respect the quality of its investigation."

The lines of battle are being drawn in the Knesset

Economic Reporter Avi Temkin finds that while many Knesset members say Recanati must go, opinion in the House is not uniform, not even along party lines

THE REFUSAL by Raphael Recanati to resign as chairman of the board of Bank Discount may be conceived in the future as a clash between right and might, between justice on the one hand, and power and influence on the other. The affair, with its moral and legal underpinnings, is developing a major political and constitutional aspect, as the Knesset and its committees slowly move on a collision course with the cabinet.

The cabinet hesitated last Sunday when faced by a request from the Governor of the Bank of Israel, Michael Bruno, to suspend Recanati for three months. Eventually it decided to postpone its decision for one week. Ministers who ten days earlier were involved in the granting of a presidential pardon to the Shin Bet head Avraham Shalom, now spoke about the dangers of a High Court injuction. Bruno's powers to suspend Recanati and the legal opinions of Attorney-General Yosef Harish.

In the same week, the Knesset State Control Committee threw its weight behind Bruno and against Recanati. Anger and concern with the cabinet action cut across party lines.

In the Liberal Party, for instance, all ministers apart from Finance Minister Moshe Nissim have came out strongly in support of Recanati. Justice Minister Yitzhak Moda'i has said Recanati is in a different category from other bankers. Tourism Minister Avraham Sharir thinks Recanati should stay on at his job, and Science Minister Gideon Patt has even praised the rebellion of Bank Discount's board of directors against the Bejski report.

BUT AT the Knesset, the picture of a homogeneously pro-Recanati Liberal Party vanishes. At least three leading Liberal MKs have not only said the Bejski recommendations should be carried out, but have also used strong words about Recanati. MKs Ariel Weinstein, Dan Tichon and Uriel Lynn have supported Bruno's demand, and want Recanati out of his post.

Weinstein has sharply criticized Recanati's remarks about the governor, in which he said Bruno was personally biased against him. "Recanati should fill his mouth with bank notes and keep quiet about Bruno," he said earlier this week after a press interview with the recalcitrant banker. Weinstein added that Bruno's integrity had been proved over many years, and that he would support him in his efforts to rehabilitate the banking system.

For Tichon the main issue is a constitutional one. He said this week that the Knesset plenum has already approved a motion in favour of the execution of the Bejski report recommendations. "If the cabinet decides against Bruno on Sunday, it would be acting against a Knesset decision. There is simply no precedent for such an attitude," he said.

Doubts about Recanati exist not only among Likud members. They are much in evidence among Labour Party ministers as well. Moreover, at the Knesset there seems to be far less enthusiasm about the Bejski recommendations among Labour MKs than among other parties. This week the Alignment faction executive rejected by six votes to two a motion by Haim Ramon to discuss Recanati's refusal to resign and Bruno's proposal. According to Shevah Weiss, there were no ulterior motives in refusing to discuss the issue. "I am not a political terrorist trying to discuss issues a few days before a cabinet debate. I want Prime Minister Shimon Peres to discuss this at the cabinet, without trying to pressure him," he said.

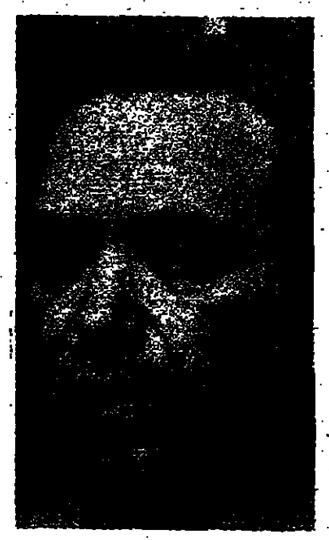

After his defeat, Ramon tried to influence the cabinet decision by reasoning with the ministers. On Tuesday he submitted a lengthy memorandum to them quoting the Bejski commission's findings on the manipulation of shares by commercial banks, including Bank Discount. The list of damaging findings includes: misleading investment counselling, bloating balances, fictitious transactions and misleading disclosure of operations. The question is whether such a list could convince Shimon Peres who might possibly be inhibited by his personal friendship for Recanati.

Yair Tsaban (Israel Sun)

David Libai (Brutmann)

Gideon Patt (Karen Benzian)

Dan Tichon (Ippa)

For some weeks Ramon has used another approach to convince the banks to execute the Bejski report recommendations. He has blocked the approval by the Knesset Finance Committee of bonds issues or changes in saving schemes conditions, if these are in any way connected to Bank Discount and other commercial banks. Not every opponent of Recanati is happy with such tactics. Weinstein called them "summary trials." But Ramon knows that in the committee he has the power to fight for proper codes of behaviour among bankers. A cabinet decision refusing to discuss Bruno's proposal is only likely to intensify Ramon's crusade against the banks.

ON THE other hand, Labour MK David Libai, the chairman of the Knesset State Control Committee, has staunchly supported the commission of inquiry and its recommendations. Libai, who was among those who promoted the establishment of a judicial commission of inquiry on the 1983 bank shares scandal, sounded bitter and sceptical this week about the prospects. "If the recommendations about Recanati are not implemented I will move to have the entire institution of judicial commissions of inquiry scrapped. If the government does not intend to fulfil their recommendations, what's the point in having them?" he said. Evidently, he did not think that this declaration made him a "political terrorist."

But Libai has not given up hope. Last month, together with the other committee members, he tabled a private bill empowering the Governor of the Bank of Israel to dismiss a bank manager refusing to comply with the recommendations of an inquiry commission. So far the government has been foot-dragging, and has used its right to freeze private bills for 60 days before they come to the Knesset plenum. On Wednesday Libai announced he was moving to reduce the delay period in the case of his bill, to only 30 days.

Another member of the Knesset State Control Committee, MK Yair Tsaban, from the opposition Mapam, compared the case of Recanati and the Bejski report to those of past commissions of inquiry. "The late David Elazar, who saved Israel during the Yom Kippur War, was forced out by the Agranat commission. No one, neither Elazar nor the cabinet headed by Golda Meir, thought that he could stay. Even Menachem Begin concluded that Ariel Sharon must stop serving as defence minister after the Kahan commission of inquiry. But this government apparently thinks that what applied to a soldier and a politician need not apply to a banker," the left-wing MK remarked.

Tsaban said that those MKs supporting Recanati are apparently not fully aware of the consequences of their actions. Undermining the basis of the Bejski report will mean undermining the basis of all commissions of inquiry – including those in the past. "Sharon has already said that he would strive to get the Kahan report erased from records. Anyone supporting Recanati is therefore supporting Sharon, too," he said.

Betting on inflation

Israelis love to gamble, but their government allows only certain forms of institutionalized games of luck, like Lotto, Toto and Mifal Hapayis. Time was, in the good old days of wildly oscillating inflation rates, when many places of work used to have an in-house "toto" on the 15th of every month. Each competitor put a fixed amount into the hat and guessed how much that month's consumer price index was going to come out at. The nearest entry scooped the pool.

In the continued absence of legalized casinos, or even horse-racing, betting on financial data is still a popular pastime, a kind of primitive version of the Chicago financial futures market. No less an institution than Bank Leumi has now offered an interesting, and original, additional method of participating.

Within a week, Leumi has introduced two financial services that are taken for granted in normal countries, but in Israel have not been seen for many years. They are an unlinked and fixed-interest loan, and an unlinked fixed interest deposit, both for six-to-12½month periods.

The ravages of inflation have long since drove most savers to deposit only in accounts in which their money was linked to the consumer price index or the dollar, while banks (obviously) preferred to make loans that were also linked. Afte the bank share crash of 1983, the Bank of Israel let interest rates rise as much as was necessary to keep in line with the rate of inflation. This sparked the growth of unlinked accounts, such as tapas and pakam, in which the rate of interest changed as often as necessary. That meant most every day at that time.

The banks gradually developed more sophisticated deposits (such as pakam) which allowed savers to tie up their money for as much as three to six months but of course guaranteed them floating interest rates even within that period, to protect them against the unknown. That way, however much inflation turned out to be, they would get a roughly equivalent interest rate. Even so, there were few takers, people preferring the day-to-day security of tapas accounts.

Then came the July 1985 economic stabilization plan and the brave new world of 1-2 per cent a month inflation – for month after boring month. In this new reality, comes Bank Leumi with the following offer:

• If you are prepared to tie up your money for six to 11 months, we will pay you 24 per cent annual interest – far more than tapas and pakam accounts are paying today, even for large amounts. For a 12-month deposit, we will pay 30 per cent.

• Conversely, if you want a loan, we will give you one at 3.5 per cent a month, fixed for six to 12 months. If you take a floating rate loan linked to the prime rate (currently 1.25 per cent a month), that will work out at 3 per cent a month now. But it could become more expensive later.

What to do? That's where the gamble comes in or, as Leumi puts it, "Customers who expect a continuation of the relative stability of the CPI over the coming six to 12 months will be interested in this investment vehicle." True enough, since it offers a yield much higher than currently available elsewhere. These expectations will also mitigate against taking the loan, since it is expensive compared with the floating-rate alternative.

But what if the customer expects an imminent end to stability? Then, clearly, he should avoid the fixed-rate deposit and take the fixed-rate loan.

• And if he thinks the stability might end in some three or six months? Then he's getting to be what economists call "indifferent" – he doesn't know what to expect? Then he should spread his risks, presumably, and try a bit of everything on offer. In which case, it's jolly decent of Leumi to have such a broad range of deposits and loans to choose between and dabble with.

Lloyd's likely to win bid to take over Standard Chartered

LONDON (Reuter). – Lloyd's Bank looks set to become Britain's biggest banking group by winning its bid to take over the fiercely independent Standard Chartered, banking analysts here said yesterday.

Lloyd's offer for Standard Chartered closes tomorrow, and analysts said that, although victory was not a foregone conclusion, Standard looked as though it had failed to convince a majority of shareholders not to accept it.

At present, Lloyd's is bottom of the table of major British banks behind Barclays, National Westminster and Midland Bank – the other big three clearing banks.

Analysts said the cost of a successful Lloyd's bid would weaken its capital ratio and probably necessitate an eventual fresh offer of Lloyd's shares to the public. Standard Chartered's share value has almost doubled from the equivalent of $6 apiece asked at the start of the year.

ANALYSIS

Nurses' strike sheds light on economy

By PINHAS LANDAU
Post Finance Reporter

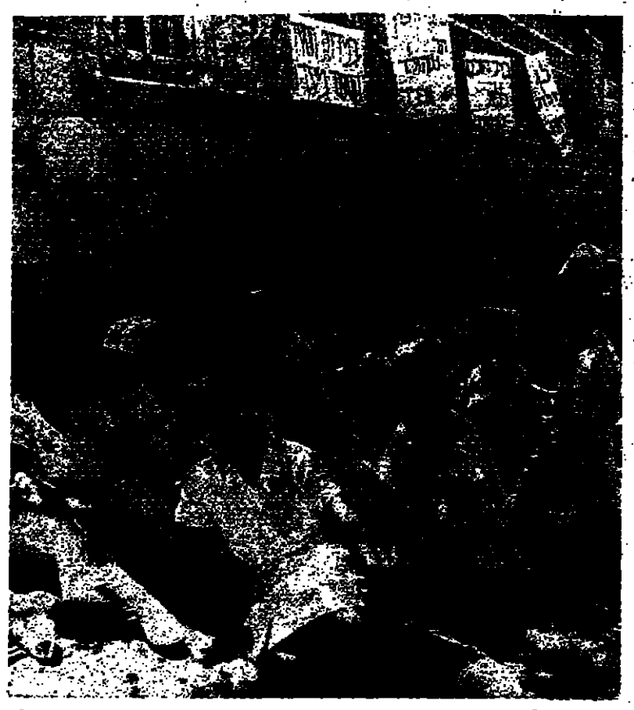

The nurses' strike generated more heat than light. But it still told everyone who watched a great deal about the state of the economy today – at different levels.

Despite all the emotion surrounding the strike, which stemmed primarily from the fact that the nurses provide medical services for sick human beings and not, say, licensing for lorries, the fact remains that this was just another wage dispute. Its economic importance stems from its timing more than anything else. Because the government won, the economic stabilization programme – which rests on wage restraint more than anything else – is still alive. Had it lost, the Treasury would itself be in need of emergency treatment.

But the most interesting thing about the strike was that it provided a classic example of the strengths and weaknesses of the economic stabilization programme, introduced last July, as it is operating today. It demonstrated that the programme is designed to solve macroeconomic problems, even at the cost of letting microeconomic ones fester.

The government's policy is designed to hold wages down – period. No exceptions may be allowed because, given the interlinked structure of salaries in Israel, and particularly in the public sector, once the Treasury has lost one battle, it has effectively lost the war. Had the nurses won, hospital administrators, doctors and so on down the line would all have demanded parity in one form or another.

That is why the nurses feel cheated. Despite talk about "working conditions," including day-care centres, transport to and from work, and all the rest, they will not get a pay rise. Against a background of ongoing national wage negotiations, that's what counts to the Treasury.

Striking nurses outside the prime minister's home: more heat than light was generated by the labour action. (Rahamim Israeli)

The Treasury's macroeconomic problem of "the wage front" is solved, at least for the moment. But what of the microeconomic problem of nurses pay? That can only get worse.

Stripping away the romance and aura of "sacred mission" that attaches to the nursing profession, one finds a simple labour market problem: the health service budgets for a specific number of hospital nursing posts, based on whatever criteria, and then finds that the supply of applicants does not match its demand. This may be because new nurses are not entering the profession or because those already in it are leaving – or both. It is a well-established and long-running phenomenon.

The fact that nurses "pay" contains a large element of non-pecuniary remuneration – meaning that their sense of mission, job satisfaction and so forth compensate them for relatively lower money wages – can only be stretched so far. Eventually, the overwork and underpay resulted in a dramatic outburst, which in a less long-suffering service would have come sooner and therefore with less bitterness. In the meantime, however, individual nurses were reaching their personal breaking point and withdrawing their services from the market to join another.

If there were private medicine, the employers would react by raising nurses pay to attract back those who left, or find others to replace them, until they had roughly sufficient for their requirements. The resolution of this latest strike ensures that the underlying supply/demand imbalance will remain, alleviated only slightly perhaps by paying more for overtime. Understaffing will remain a chronic problem, the Israeli public will continue to demand more medical services and the marginal nurses will continue to be squeezed out, one at a time and without media attention.

There is a way of ameliorating the situation in the hospitals, even without radical, free-market solutions. One is to redistribute the existing budgets of the Health Ministry and the hospitals so as to provide more money for nurses. The elements of this solution are well known: less administrative staff at the ministry and in the hospitals, and greater efficiency from those who remain; the elimination of superfluous departments that are maintained for reasons of prestige and to provide jobs; spending less money on state-of-the-art equipment that is in use for six-to-12 hours a day and spending more on the people who use it; and, finally, concentrate equipment in regional clinics, to be used by all the local hospitals.

These remain, however, anathema to the vested inteests in the medical sector. The system – nurses, doctors, administrators – evidently will have to detetiorate further before the inevitable happens.

World diamond group won't admit India

By JOSEPH MORGENSTERN

TEL AVIV. – India's application to join the World Federation of Diamond Bourses was rejected again last week at the organization's congress in Israel, largely because the country does not have diplomatic relations with Israel.

Ed Goldstein, the newly elected president of the federation, said that in all other respects India met the requirements for membership. Moshe Schnitzer, president of the Israel Diamond Exchange, added that Israel opposed India's admission because of the country's restrictions on Israelis.

"India continues to impose commercial and travel restrictions on Israelis – a situation which I find untenable," Schnitzer said.

Despite the restrictions, India's huge diamond industry, which has an annual turnover of $1.1 billion and employs 300,000 people, does considerable business with Israel. Israeli diamond merchants frequently buy stones produced in India for resale, and several Indian concerns have representatives in Israel.

Urdan workers end week-long strike

MITZPE RIMON (Ism). – The Urdan Industries Ltd. metalworks factory here resumed operation yesterday, following management's decision to accept a Histadrut proposal to reinstate a dismissed worker whose firing had sparked the week-long walk out.

The strike was caused by the dismissal of Solomon Edri, who was representing the workers in negotiations for a collective contract; the workers currently hold individual contracts. Urdan sought a restraining order against the striking workers from the Beersheba Magistrates Court. But the court rejected the request, arguing that workers are entitled to strike even if they are not employed under a collective contract.

The factory management then accepted the Histadrut's compromise solution, under which Edri was reinstated but remains suspended from work until his case is clarified.

Trade Ministry workers return to jobs

By MICHAL YUDELMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The High Court of Justice yesterday issued an interim injunction forbidding Industry and Trade Minister Ariel Sharon from appointing two commercial attachés, one in New York and one in Hamburg.

High Court Justice Aharon Barak also issued an order nisi to Sharon and the civil service commissioner to answer within 45 days an appeal concerning irregularities in the minister's appointment of officials abroad.

Despite the court order, Sharon said yesterday that he intends to continue appointing former army officers to posts not taken by ministry workers.

The High Court orders were made at the request of 55 university-educated workers from the Industry and Trade Ministry, who maintained that the commercial attachés' appointments were made on the basis of the candidates' political connections with Sharon and therefore violated regulations.

Ministry workers claim that more experienced employees were passed over when Sharon recently appointed Reuven Ben-Shalom and Moshe Ben-Natan, both from outside the ministry, to be commercial attachés in New York and Hamburg, respectively.

In response to the court orders, the ministry's workers, who have been imposing increasingly severe sanctions since the beginning of the week, decided yesterday to resume regular work at least until next Wednesday.

The workers decided to return to work as a gesture of good will that would enable ministry officials to negotiate with them over their demands. As for the controversial appointments, which were among the workers' grievances, the workers announced they would abide by the High Court's decision.

At a stormy meeting yesterday, most works committee representatives wanted to step up the sanctions. But Histadrut official Aharon Handelman persuaded them to resume regular work.

The ministry workers said that if the ministry did not begin negotiations with them by next Wednesday, they will consider renewing sanctions.

Sources in Sharon's office said ministry officials had agreed to negotiations with the workers only if they end sanctions and cancel their appeal to the high court. Thus, it is not clear whether the management would agree to talks.

Sources in Sharon's office said one of the appointments he made, that of Yosef Shvo, an aluf mishne in reserves, was only done after four ministry workers turned down the job. The office did not refer to the two appointments that workers had brought to the high court.

RICH AND POOR. – Economic growth patterns in the past five years threaten to split the U.S. into a nation of relatively well-off coastal dwellers and a disadvantaged heartland, says a new congressional study.

While growth over the nation as a whole has been sluggish in recent years, those living in California and in 15 east coast states would hardly have noticed, according to the analysis by the joint economic committee released Thursday.

VACUUM

Aviv bankers are hoping that the cabinet supports Bruno on Sunday.

As one banker put it, "What we want, and personalities have nothing to do with this, is to move forward from the Bejski recommendations and deal with the banks' real problems – which were ignored while the system was taken up with the commission of inquiry and its aftermath."

Roy Isacowitz adds:

The Histadrut spokesman said yesterday that it was "virtually unthinkable" that Secretary-General Yisrael Kessar would back Recanati.

Within hours of the release of the Bejski Commission report, the spokesman recalled, Kessar announced that Bank Hapoalim would honour the findings "both in letter and in spirit." It was that clear stand which compelled the bank's former chairman, Giora Gazit, to become the first bank head to announce his resignation, the spokesman said.

Kessar himself was unavailable for comment.

Labour Party Secretary-General Uzi Baram said that he strongly supported Bruno's efforts to have Recanati removed. It would be "very unfortunate" if the Knesset had to pass a law directed at Recanati personally in order to gain his resignation, Baram said.

By deciding to appear before the Bejski Commission, Discount Bank had acknowleged the panel's legitimacy, Baram said. "It cannot turn around now and say that it does not recognize the commission's conclusions."

Labour Party sources were bitterly critical of what they said was an "intensive lobbying campaign" by Recanati to win ministers over to his side. At least two Alignment ministers are believed to have changed their minds over the past two weeks and now side with Recanati, they said, adding that they considered it to be "touch and go" whether Bruno would get his majority.

ably be persuaded to honour his resignation (announced on June 24 but not yet effected)."

The three pardoned officials were "very likely" to remain, the source said.

"The return of the suspended officers is the only way the service can regain its lost sense of leadership," he said.

A Shin Bet legal adviser, in a separate affidavit to the High Court, admitted that he had helped coordinate testimonies between Shin Bet members before the Zorea and Blattman commissions. "I helped witnesses match their testimonies in order to conceal the Shin Bet's part in the killing of terrorists," the adviser's affidavit stated.

At the July High Court hearing, the validity of the pardons will be debated before a panel of three justices. The court will either order Attorney-General Yosef Harish and the Shin Bet's legal advisers to explain why the pardons should be upheld, or dismiss the petitioners' claims. The court will also hear a petition submitted by the families of the two terrorists.

Comment

The dollar was little changed towards the close of a dull session. Trading parameters were narrow in the absence of U.S. economic data or interest rate news, although the dollar's improvement was more marked against sterling as the British currency was weighed down by oil-price concerns. Uncertainty lingered over the chance of a U.S. discount rate cut.

Selling pressure eased after the Dow Industrials defended the 1,800 level. Bonds recovered from their lows, erasing a negative factor. Transports and utilities were aiding a comeback, though organized selling pressure was uncovered with each rally attempt, traders said.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average was 10 points lower at 1816, after falling as low as 1805. Declines led advances four-three on strong volume of 130 million shares.

Sanders Associates led the actives, up five to 61¾. Lockheed has agreed to acquire Sanders for $60 per share. Another suitor, Loral Corp., had offered $50 per share.

Won't go away

DESPITE the peace with Egypt and the virtual non-belligerence with Jordan, this country is, and will for the foreseeable future remain, under siege. Arab-backed Palestinian-terrorism is an ever-present threat that dictates constant vigilance.

Many countries around the world, certainly in the Middle East, would, in Israel's situation, have fallen into wholesale militarization of their polities and denial of civil rights and liberties to their peoples. In Israel's 38 years nothing like this has ever happened – it did not happen even during the War of Independence, when the fledgling state's very survival hung in the balance. The Jewish republic has never wavered in its fundamental commitment to democracy and the rule of law.

Lately, however, voices have been heard – on both sides of the Alignment-Likud divide – suggesting that, so long as Israel has not utterly crushed the Arab opposition and fairly guaranteed its national safety, the rule of law must be suspended whenever those in charge of security deem necessary. It is, therefore, important now to sound the tocsin and warn that, if this heady counsel is officially endorsed, Israel will cease to be itself.

Early yesterday morning a four-man terrorist gang, obviously seeking to cross into Galilee, was wiped out by IDF soldiers after it had landed on the coast of southern Lebanon. In a brief engagement two soldiers, one of them a young Beduin, were killed, and nine wounded, one of them badly. The incident proved that, even when it spots the arrival of a hostile boat, the navy is not uniformly able to prevent a successful landing. It showed again the need for sustained alertness.

The country's vice premier, and its premier-to-be in another three months, however, saw in the incident a convenient "reminder" that the national effort must focus wholly on the fight against terror, and that the internal argument about the Shin Bet affair must promptly cease. As to what that affair involved, Yitzhak Shamir had two days earlier made his opinion for the first time more or less clear in a somewhat rambling newspaper interview: it involved "some kind of lynching," all participants in which should have been absolved of any guilt at the very start.

In any case, now that the principal parties have been rightly pardoned by the president, finis should come to the affair, and it would, too, were it not for the press still fussing about it and pressing on with the demand – unsupported according to Mr. Shamir by "ninety per cent of the people" – to have the affair investigated.

Mr. Shamir is not alone in this view, even outside the ranks of the Likud. In another interview this week Arye Nehamkin, the Alignment's minister of agriculture, proposed that "any and every means is legitimate" in the battle against terrorism. Morality in this battle is, to Mr. Nehamkin, what the Shin Bet at any time decides it is.

We now know, however, from the admissions of the pardoned Shin Bet operatives to the High Court of Justice, that this morality can be applied not only against Arab foes, but also against Israelis, as in the case of Aluf Yitzhak Mordechai, and against the legitimate institutions of state, as attested by their readiness to cheat and perjure themselves in court. And we know that their one excuse for these actions was permission from their civilian superior at the time, none other than Mr. Shamir.

If it was ever possible to just sweep the affair under the carpet by getting the Shin Bet director to merely step down – an arrangement in which the then attorney-general, Yitzhak Zamir, was willing to acquiesce – that possibility no longer exists. Even the incumbent attorney-general, Yosef Harish, after some needless convolutions of legal advice, has finally come back to his predecessor's considered view that the only alternative to a police probe is a secret inquiry by a judicial commission.

The High Court may or may not recommend, let alone order, that course of action when it gives its decision in the matter. But it is plainly inescapable, as Mr. Peres, although it seems not Mr. Shamir, now realizes. The affair may, indeed, as so many frightened souls have observed, become a Pandora's Box that, when opened up, will cause ever more turmoil. But that will happen only if, instead of being treated with judicious care, it is buried in the sand, in the vain expectation that it will thus somehow disappear.

An Israel true to itself has nothing at all to fear from an investigation of the affair.

Nurses give in

EIGHTEEN days out on strike, or at least half strike, and the hospital nurses have next-to-nothing to show for it. Their demand for representation separate from that of the Histadrut's Nurses' Union was granted last week already, and it was in any case only a means to an end.

Admittedly, the nurses' timing was dreadful. They need not have expected any open expression of readiness by the government to significantly raise their wages at the very time when national wage talks had just started. The government is committed to the line that wage rises in the coming year must be linked only to productivity and the index. Standing up to the nurses will give a powerful new dose of credibility to the government in these national wage negotiations. The hospital nurses, for their part, will enter negotiations without any assurance that, even once the framework wage agreement is signed, their own specific wage claims will be given any consideration.

It is unclear whether the government – meaning, in essence, the Treasury – believes that, now that the nurses have capitulated, it can put off indefinitely resolution of their pay issue and cover the fact up by all sorts of extravagant promises about improving the nurses' working conditions.

Perhaps that is indeed the intention, and the nurses, having given in to a higher power, will now dutifully cooperate with the victors. But without a real pay rise individual nurses will keep deserting their full-time hospital posts, and their ranks will not be refilled by veterans coming back nor by young recruits from the nursing schools. The situation in the nurse-short hospitals will only grow worse, and the sufferers will be the country's sick.

If the government does not care, or if it does but can do nothing about it, then let it at least make a public confession to that effect. Let the people be told openly that poor Israel simply cannot afford a first-class public system of medicine, and let the Histadrut, custodian of much of the present system, take notice.

Misuse of the judicial commission

MEIR MERHAV

IN THE ongoing controversy over subjecting the General Security Service (Shin Bet) affair to a judicial commission of inquiry, what has gone almost unnoticed is that we are witnessing an attempt at a gross subversion of the role and purpose of inquiry commissions. If successful, it may hold grave dangers for our political system.

The institution of a judicial commission of inquiry in Israel comes from English law. Israeli legislation has expanded their competences and functions. But judicial commissions of inquiry were not intended to give the government a device to bypass the regular process of law – not for political convenience, not for the sake of security, not to ensure star-chamber secrecy, and certainly not to ensure that criminal acts would go unpunished.

On the contrary, judicial commissions of inquiry were instituted to fill the grey area between the regular judicial system and the political process, where the former is inadequate to deal with extraordinary and grave events of public interest, and latter is unresponsive to the redress and changes they require.

They were primarily instituted for two purposes. The first was to probe events in which the government and its executive organs held prima facie responsibility, but where the political process of our parliamentary system provided no redress, and where no firmly established norms of personal accountability ensured that the individuals responsible for misdeeds – even only mishaps – would draw conclusions from their failure. Their second purpose was to investigate events in which, despite their obviously grave and even calamitous results for the public, there was no prima facie evidence of criminal acts which might provide grounds for regular legal proceedings.

One expert has recently defined the purpose of judicial commissions somewhat more crudely and even cynically: they are intended to buy the government time when public indignation blames it for some mishap, and to find culprits when it is not evident where the culpability lies.

Neither condition applies to the Shin Bet affair. There was never any prima facie evidence of political responsibility, and there clearly was prima facie evidence of criminal deeds, the guilt for which has now been admitted in the affidavits submitted to the Supreme Court by Shin Bet chief Avraham Shalom and his subordinates. Former attorney-general Yitzhak Zamir therefore quite properly ordered a police inquiry – the normal procedure.

Zamir's willingness and that of present Attorney-General Yosef Harish (who daily swings back and forth between all possible options) to accept the apointment of a judicial commission of inquiry as an alternative was a gross error – much worse than a bold decision to close the case, provided that the Shin Bet chief resigned.

Such a decision, controversial as it might have been – particularly in view of the morally despicable frame-up of Aluf Yitzhak Mordechai that was part of the conspiracy – would have been less damaging than resorting to a judicial commission of inquiry as a device to circumvent the normal legal process.

There is no need to waste words on the third evasive device over which Harish initially rejoiced – the glaring misuse of the presidential pardon which is now before the Supreme Court and which gives the attorney-general cause for second thoughts.

THE PRESIDENTIAL pardon, if upheld by the Supreme Court, will block the normal police investigation of the Shin Bet affair that should have been initiated. The danger of "leaks," revealing the secrets of the secret service as its agents will have to defend themselves, has already been sufficiently ridiculed. But the appointment of a judicial commission of inquiry, particularly at this late stage, will be the worst of all conceivable ways of winding up this affair. It may well be the beginning of the end of the instituion of judicial commissions – an institution with which our political and judicial system cannot yet dispense.

Why this is so can be seen from the consequences or – perhaps better, non-consequences, so far – of the Bejski Commission's recommendations with respect to the top individuals responsible for the bank share manipulation. Insofar as one function of judicial commissions is to assign personal or ministerial responsibility to the political echelon, where the political process itself fails to do so, all of the three important commissions of inquiry appointed so far have failed.

The Agranat Commission, appointed after the Yom Kippur War because the public refused to be placated by the vacuous declaration of then president Ephraim Katzir that "we are all guilty," framed its terms of reference narrowly and either absolved the political echelon from responsibility or ignored it.

The Kahan Commission went a hesitant step further. It called upon Ariel Sharon, then defence minister, to draw personal conclusions, and suggested to then prime minister Menachem Begin to fire him if he would not step down voluntarily. Begin and Shamir were left alone, and so was the chief of general staff, Rav-Aluf Rafael Eitan, in view of the impending end of his term of duty.

The Bejski Commission, which had the courage to go beyond its terms of reference and comment on the "bank share arrangement" whereby the government took over an obligation of nearly $7 billion to bail out the banks, nevertheless refrained from demanding accountability from the political echelon. It adopted the attitude that the responsibility of political leaders must be left to the electorate. (On that, one despairing cynic recently said that if elections were able to change anything, they would not be permitted.)

The Bejski Commission's recommendations with respect to personal responsibility therefore concentrated on the then-incumbent Bank of Israel governor and the top bank managers. This unprecedented set of government undertook to buy the bank shares: "...when a corporation is unable to meet its obligations, its creditors are entitled to take over its assets."

> 'Failure to heed the findings and recommendations of commissions of inquiry and their overuse may lead to cynicism and despair'

That means taking possession of the commercial banks. Had the government done so, it would have been able to dismiss all the directors and managers, and re-appoint whomever it saw fit. This would have made all the "personal recommendations" of the Bejski commission unnecessary, with the added advantage that those seconds-in-command who are no less culpable than the top executives, would also have had to step down. But the government refused to take this course of action, for fear that it would look like nationalizing the banks (which it would not necessarily have meant).

A second way of overcoming the difficulty of implementing the personal recommendations of the Bejski Commission – except for Bank Hapoalim, none has implemented them in full, and Raphael Recanati, chairman of the Israel Discount Bank, has remained utterly recalcitrant – would have been to initiate criminal proceedings against the top bank executives, on the basis of the commission's findings and recommendations.

Paragraph 11 of the 1941 Bank Ordinance disqualifies an individual from managing a bank if he has "been sentenced to a term of imprisonment for an offence involving moral turpitude." The report contains plenty of grounds for initiating legal proceedings for such offences: breach of trust; submission of misleading, if not falsified, financial statements; dishonest advice to customers, and others.

Even a suspended jail sentence would have sufficed to disqualify those found guilty from participating, directly or indirectly, in the management of any bank, forever.

In England there is a constitutional convention that evidence brought to light in such a tribunal will not be used to initiate criminal proceedings, on the grounds that this would put the individual concerned in double jeopardy.

Advocate A. Klagsbald has made this point in the legal opinion on the case he gave to the Israel Discount Bank. What he seems to have forgotten is that in England, as in other countries where the rules about what "isn't done" are firmer than in Israel, there is also another convention, perhaps not constitutional but no less binding: that it would be utterly unthinkable for anyone to refuse to resign if found guilty by a commission of inquiry of gross failure, public misbehaviour, or misdeeds bordering on the criminal.

THE ISRAELI norm of conduct is the opposite. It is that a position of power, in politics, in administration and in business, is an untouchable prerogative which has nothing to do with performance. When, as in the case of Recanati, it is combined with the control of property (no matter that these rights are upheld only by the grace of government), these quasi-feudal rights become totally inalienable.

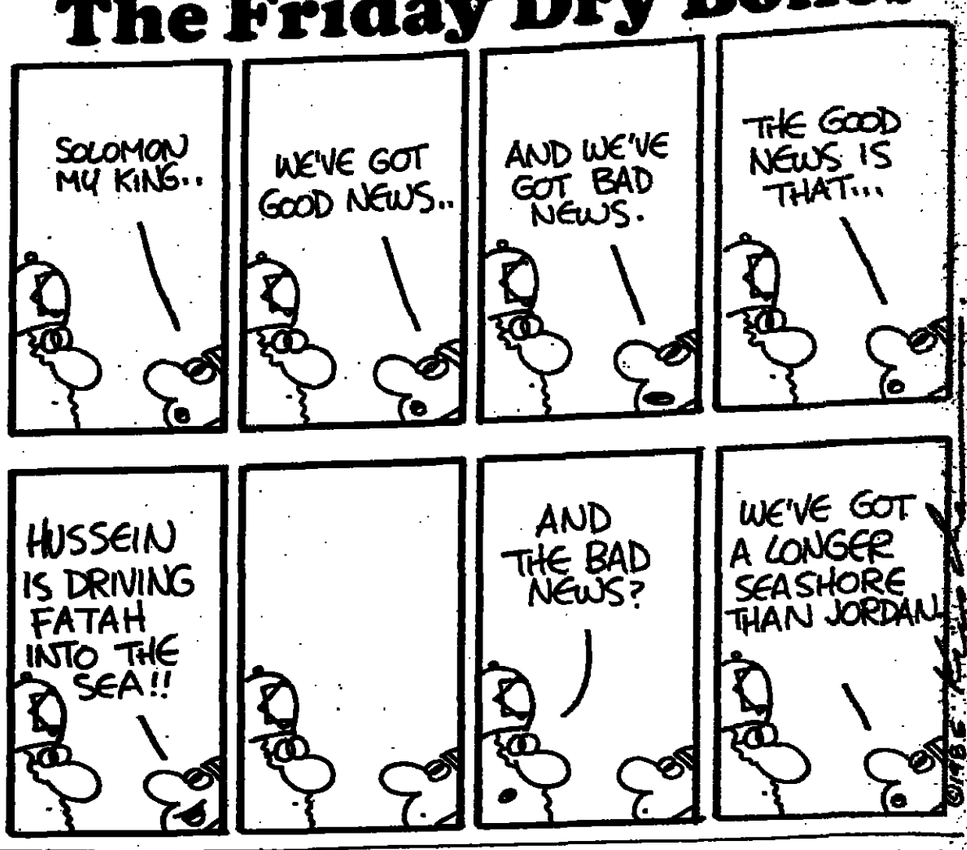

The point of the Bejski Commission's recommendations is therefore that where the unwritten norms of personal accountability do not exist, they must be imposed by force. If that goes beyond the written letter of the law, so be it.

Failure to correctly use commissions of inquiry may lead to two results. It may produce an ever stronger affirmation of the norms of conduct that are perceived as having been breached. That would be a healthy development, but it might lead to an ever more frequent resort to commissions of inquiry – with the danger that they may be devalued.

But it is more likely that the failure to heed the findings and recommendations of commissions of inquiry, and their overuse may lead to cynicism and despair of the entire democratic process.

Worst of all is the still-intended misuse, in the Shin Bet affair, of a commission of inquiry as a tool of convenience for the government – to hide misdeeds instead of exposing them, to condone them instead of punishing them, to save the skin of the politicians responsible instead of calling them to account. This is all in direct contradiction to the original purpose of the stopgap institution of judicial commissions.

READERS' LETTERS

REFUSENIKS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, – After reading Louis Rapoport's article of June 20 about the refuseniks, I was compelled to write to you to tell you how excellent it was.

As an activist in the Soviet Jewry movement in the United States, I realize the importance of this type of article for the cause. The Jerusalem Post is the voice of Israel in the U.S., and Rapoport's article will be a very positive influence in this regard.

We U.S. activists have long believed that the Soviet Jewry movement should be led by Israel, and articles such as this one can only help to establish Israel, in the minds of Diaspora Jewry, as the leader.

TEHIYA POSITION

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, – Joel Greenberg notes in his review of the official Jordanian publication, "Occupied Arab Lands" (June 18) that the Tehiya convention is given a special mention, including a supposed resolution dealing with the "deportation of Palestinian refugees from the West Bank."

Tehiya Chairman Yuval Ne'eman's proposal which was adopted at the convention dealt with Israel's long-standing position, supported by all Israel's governments since 1948 until now, that the solution of the refugee problem lies not in Israel but in Arab countries. The best possible situation for all, the refugees themselves, Israel and the world in the long term, is their resettlement.

No forceful measures are implied in this position and there was no mention of deportation except by Tehiya's political opponents who volunteered to interpret our ideological platform.

MALCOLM HOENLEIN

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, – In "Public Faces" of June 6, Mark Segal reports that Malcolm Hoenlein, the new Executive Vice Chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, was opposed by the "Reform bloc." This is not true.

As Executive Vice President of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, I represent one of the four organizations of that so-called bloc; I was given an opportunity to express my opinion and did so, highly favouring the selection of Mr. Hoenlein, who is without doubt one of the most capable and dedicated Jewish civil servants of our time. He is a man of extraordinary decency and rationality, and there is no evidence whatsoever that he would not be acceptable in terms of Reform interests.

The unique qualities of my beloved friend Yehuda Hellman can never be replaced, but I am deeply thankful that someone as remarkably competent and dedicated to the cause of Israel and the Jewish people as Malcolm Hoenlein was available to step into this crucial post.

Let met also correct the impression that there is a "Reform bloc." The Presidents' Conference simply does not operate along those lines.

Rabbi JOSEPH B. GLASER,
Executive Vice President,
Central Conference of American Rabbis

READ THE J.P.

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, – I was in your lovely city a few weeks ago and enjoyed my stay very much – including reading your newspaper every day. I got so used to it that I miss it here and buy it on Fridays.

Through reading your paper, one becomes more Zionist than by reading all those boring pamphlets we get here from the Jewish Agency and other institutions in Israel and abroad, which we usually throw away without reading.

JERUSALEM U.S. CONSULATE GENERAL

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, – I felt a strong sense of discrimination at the U.S. Consulate General in Jerusalem when I introduced myself as a travel agent from East Jerusalem, and was told to get out of the building.

What offence did I commit? Is it against the law to be with my relative, also as a travel agent, during an interview for a visa, only because I am an Arab, which I am proud to be?

Four Israeli passport holders got their visas in front of me, without showing any papers.

JOHN ZAMBIL.
Jerusalem.

The U.S. Consulate-General replies:

The policy of the Visa Section is to admit only visa applicants, plus at times those strictly needed to accompany or stand in for applicants (e.g., parents of minors, children of the elderly), and other individuals a Consular Officer expressly calls to interview. Those not fitting into one of these categories who find their way to the interviewing area are politely asked to withdraw. The reason for this policy will be clear to our visitors: the waiting room is small and is usually very crowded.

The Consulate General does not discriminate on the basis of ethnic or any other background.
